PREFACE

These two volumes contain the second part of Snorri Sturluson's Edda, Skáldskaparmál. Part I, Prologue and Gylfaginning, was published by the Clarendon Press, Oxford, in 1982, and reissued in paperback by the Viking Society for Northern Research in 1988. A second, corrected edition was published by the Viking Society in 2005. Part III, Háttatal, was published by the Clarendon Press in 1991, and reissued in paperback with addenda and corrigenda by the Viking Society in 1999. Part II thus makes the work complete.

Skáldskaparmál contains a lot of poetry that was composed mainly in Norway and Iceland in the ninth to twelfth centuries. Though much of it is quoted in short extracts, it constitutes an anthology of verse of various kinds, including mythological, historical, lyrical and other types of verse, selected and commented on by one of the major authors of thirteenth-century Iceland. This edition provides these examples of Old Norse verse with extensive explanatory notes and, in volume 2, a full glossary and index. It is hoped that it will be useful to students as an introduction to a wide variety of early Scandinavian poetry, presented in an authentic context and reflecting the taste and interests of an educated Icelander of the great age of saga-writing, himself a practised poet.

I am grateful for the comments and corrections of Peter Foote, Richard Perkins and Mats Malm on the final draft of this book.

INTRODUCTION

Title

Skáldskaparmál ('the language of poetry') is the second major part of Snorri Sturluson's Edda ('Treatise on poetry'; sometimes called the Prose Edda), coming in those manuscripts that include more than one part of the work between Gylfaginning and Háttatal. The name is not found as the heading of this part of the text in any early manuscript (R and W have large ornamental initials at 1/2, though neither they nor T have any heading at 1/1; see textual note), but is used in the rubric at the head of the whole text in the Uppsala manuscript (U): 'Er fyrst frá Ásum ok Ymi, þar næst Skáldskapar mál ok heiti margra hluta.' At 3/10 this manuscript also includes the words 'hér hefr [or hefir] mjok setning skáldskapar' and in the version of the beginning of ch. 3 that it has before before ch. 2 (SnE 1848–87, II 302) 'Hér hefr Skáldskapar mál ok heiti margra hluta'. In fact the editors of the Arnamagnæan edition (SnE 1848–87) took the first narrative sections of Skáldskaparmál as a continuation of Gylfaginning, and numbered the first chapters 55-8 accordingly, entitling this section Bragaræður ('speeches of Bragi'), labelling 5/25-6/29 the Eptirmáli ('Epilogue'; placed at 5/8) and beginning Skáldskaparmál itself at 5/9 (this arrangement of the text follows that of Rask (SnE 1818), where Skáldskaparmál is often called 'Skálda'). Their chapters 55-8, however, do not continue the dialogue of Gylfaginning; they open a new narrative frame, a conversation between the god Bragi and Ægir, a personification of the sea, which seems to continue through much of Skáldskaparmál. Though the indications of the speakers peter out in the course of this section as they do in Háttatal, and there is little sign of dialogue from ch. 43 onwards, several later chapters are introduced by a question, and the whole of the rest of Skáldskaparmál, to the end of ch. 74, can be taken as the words of Bragi. Apart from the opening chapter, only in 5/25-6/29 is the voice clearly authorial, and though ch. 33 does not really fit into the scheme (see below), chapters G55-58 seem designed as an introduction to Skáldskaparmál even if they were perhaps written after the bulk of the rest of the section. The word skáldskaparmál appears also at 5/15 and in the passage in A which introduces a list of kennings which is placed immediately before the extracts from Skáldskaparmál in that manuscript (see p. xlvii below; note also TGT 104).

Synopsis

Chapter G55: (The chapter numbers are those of SnE 1848–87, and the first four are a continuation of the chapter numbers of Gylfaginning): Óðinn and the Æsir entertain Ægir to a feast.

Chapter 656: Bragi tells Ægir the story of the giant Pjazi's theft of Iðunn and her golden apples, their recovery by Loki and how the Æsir killed Pjazi and compensated his daughter Skaði; and how Pjazi and his brothers had taken their father's inheritance.

Chapter G57: The origin of the mead of poetry in the blood of Kvasir.

Chapter G58: How Óðinn brought the mead of poetry to the Æsir.

Chapter 1: The categories of poetry.

Eptirmáli ('Epilogue', 5/25–6/29): The meaning and purpose of the work. The story of Troy as an allegory of Norse myths.

Chapter 2: Kennings for Óðinn. Verses 1–26.

Chapter 3: Kennings for poetry. Verses 27-41.

Chapter 4: Kennings for Þórr. Verses 42-58.

Chapter 5: Kennings for Baldr.

Chapter 6: Kennings for Njǫrðr. Verse 59.

Chapter 7: Kennings for Freyr. Verses 60-63.

Chapter 8: Kennings for Heimdallr.

Chapter 9: Kennings for Týr.

Chapter 10: Kennings for Bragi.

Chapter 11: Kennings for Viðarr.

Chapter 12: Kennings for Váli.

Chapter 13: Kennings for Hoðr.

Chapter 14: Kennings for Ullr.

Chapter 15: Kennings for Hænir.

Chapter 16: Kennings for Loki. Verse 64.

Chapter 17: Pórr's duel with Hrungnir. Verses 65–71 (Haustlong 14–20).

Chapter 18: Pórr's journey to Geirrøðargarðar. Verses 72, 73–91 (Pórsdrápa 1–15, 17–20).

Chapter 19: Kennings for Frigg.

Chapter 20: Kennings for Freyja.

Chapter 21: Kennings for Sif.

Chapter 22: Kennings for Iðunn. Verses 92–104 (Haustlong 1–13).

Chapter 23: Kennings for the sky. Verses 105-16.

Chapter 24: Kennings for the earth. Verses 117–22.

Chapter 25: Kennings for the sea. Verses 123–34.

Chapter 26: Kennings for the sun. Verses 135-6.

- Chapter 27: Kennings for the wind. Verse 137.
- Chapter 28: Kennings for fire.
- Chapter 29: Kennings for winter. Verses 138-9.
- Chapter 30: Kennings for summer. Verse 140.
- Chapter 31: Kennings for man and woman.
- Chapter 32: Kennings for gold.
- Chapter 33: Gold = Ægir's fire; Ægir's feast for the gods. Verse 141.
- Chapter 34: Gold = Glasir's foliage. Verse 142.
- Chapter 35: Gold = Sif's hair. The dwarfs make treasures for the gods.
- Chapter 36: Gold = Fulla's head-band. Verse 143.
- Chapter 37: Gold = Freyja's tears; her daughter Hnoss. Verses 144–9.
- Chapter 38: Gold = giants' words. Verse 150.
- Chapter 39: Gold = otter-payment. The origin of this kenning.
- Chapter 40: Gold = Fáfnir's lair. Sigurðr's slaying of the serpent Fáfnir. Verses 151–2 (from Fáfnismál).
- Chapter 41: Sigurðr and Brynhildr; his marriage to Guðrún and death.
- Chapter 42: Deaths of the Niflungar, Atli and Jormunrekkr. Verses 153–8 (Ragnarsdrápa 18, 3–7).
- Chapter 43: Gold = Fróði's meal. The mill Grotti. Verses 159–82 (Grottasongr), 183–4.
- Chapter 44: The origin of Hrólfr kraki's nickname. Gold = Kraki's seed. Hrólfr's expedition to Uppsala. Verses 185–6.
- Chapter 45: Gold = Hǫlgi's mound-roof. The old lay of Bjarki. Verses 187, 188–90 (Bjarkamál 4–6).
- Chapter 46: Gold = fire of the hand, etc. Verses 191–5.
- Chapter 47: Kennings for man and woman as givers of gold and as trees. Verses 196–218.
- Chapter 48: Kennings for battle. Verses 219-25.
- Chapter 49: Kennings for weapons and armour. Verses 226-49.
- Chapter 50: Battle = the Hjaðnings' storm. Hjaðningavíg. Further kennings for battle and weapons. Verses 250–54 (Ragnarsdrápa 8–12), 255.
- Chapter 51: Kennings for ship. Verses 256-67.
- Chapter 52: Kennings for Christ. Verses 268-77.
- Chapter 53: Kennings for kings. Terms for kings and noblemen. Verses 278–99.
- Chapter 54: Ókend heiti. Terms for poetry. Verses 300a-b, 301-3.
- Chapter 55: Terms for pagan gods. Verses 304-8.

Chapter 56: Terms for the heavens, sun and moon.

Chapter 57: Terms for the earth. Verses 309–17.

Chapter 58: Terms for wolves, bears, stags, horses, oxen, snakes, cattle, sheep, swine. Verses 318–31 (including Porgrímspula and Kálfsvísa or Alsvinnsmál).

Chapter 59: Terms for the sky and weather. Verse 332 (from Alvíssmál).

Chapter 60: Terms for raven and eagle. Verses 333-43.

Chapter 61: Terms for the sea. Verses 344–69.

Chapter 62: Terms for fire. Verses 370-79.

Chapter 63: Terms for times and seasons. Verse 380 (from Alvíssmál).

Chapter 64: Terms for men. Kings. Hálfdan the Old and his sons. Verses 381–411.

Chapter 65: Terms for men.

Chapter 66: Pula of terms for men.

Chapter 67: Terms for men:viðkenningar, sannkenningar and fornofn.

Chapter 68: Terms for women; $vi\delta(r)$ kenningar.

Chapter 69: Terms for the head, eyes, ears, mouth, teeth, tongue, hair.

Chapter 70: Terms for heart, mind and emotions.

Chapter 71: Terms for arms and legs, hands and feet.

Chapter 72: Terms for speech (and kennings for battle).

Chapter 73: Terms for wisdom and other mental qualities.

Chapter 74: Homonyms, ofljóst.

Chapter 75: Pulur of names and synonyms for sea-kings, giants, troll-wives, gods and goddesses, women, men, battle, various weapons and armour, sea, rivers, fish, whales, ships, land, various animals, domestic and wild, the heavens and the sun. Verses 412–517.

The composition of the work

Háttatal, which is a poem illustrating the use of various verse-forms with a commentary that is mostly concerned with explaining the metrical and other formal devices used in their construction, and was probably written before Skáldskaparmál, also includes some passages concerned with poetical language (e. g. Háttatal 1/55–6/21; i. e. verses 2–6 and commentary), and it seems likely that the author did not at first envisage compiling a separate section on the language of poetry. When he did start doing that, he listed various poetical terms under their designations, and the fact that in the second half of Skáldskaparmál kennings and heiti (simplex poetical terms) are not consistently separated (cf. note to 87/8–9) suggests that at first he did not plan to separate these two categories in his treatment of them (there is even more mixing of the two categories in the version of Skáldskaparmál in the Uppsala manuscript), and that when he did decide to have separate sections dealing with kennings and heiti he did not take all the kennings out of the heiti lists; this may imply that the work was still in the process of revision at the author's death. This second half of Skáldskaparmál also makes less consistent use of the dialogue form, and as in Háttatal the speakers are here not generally named, and it is likely that the dialogue in the form it now has evolved gradually, only perhaps being provided with a narrative introduction after the bulk of the material had been compiled. In various parts of Skáldskaparmál narratives are also included to account for the origins of some of the kennings by recounting the myths and legends that were thought to have given rise to them. These are added in a somewhat unsystematic way (and are not all present in all of the manuscripts), and some (particularly the account of Otrgjold and the Gjúkungar) have by some been thought to be interpolations. Whether they were added by the original author or by a later reviser, it is likely that these were not in the original plan of the work, and the introductory chapters (1/1-5/8), which among other things recount the myth of the origin of poetry, may have been the last to be compiled. Then, as with the discussions of poetical language in Háttatal, it may be that the writer felt that there were too many such narratives to incorporate into Skáldskaparmál, and it is likely that Gylfaginning and its prologue were made into a separate introduction to the whole work to provide the mythical and legendary background to the whole of skaldic verse.

Date and authorship

Háttatal must have been written soon after Snorri Sturluson's first visit to Norway in 1218–20; Skáldskaparmál may have been begun shortly afterwards and is likely to have been in process of compilation for some time. Its lack of organisation (compared with both Gylfaginning and Háttatal, as well as with Heimskringla) suggests that it was unfinished at the time of Snorri's death in 1241. Though various interpolations may have been made by a later hand, the attribution of the main part of Skáldskaparmál to Snorri is generally accepted, and is implied by the rubric at the beginning of the Uppsala manuscript (SnE 1848-87, II 250: 'Bók þessi heitir Edda. Hana hefir saman setta Snorri Sturlusonr eptir þeim hætti sem hér er skipat. Er fyrst frá Ásum ok Ymi, þar næst Skáldskapar mál ok heiti margra hluta') and the reference in the fragmentary manuscript AM 748 I b 4to (SnE 1848–87, II 427–8: 'Hér er lykt þeim hlut bókar er Óláfr Þórðarson hefir samansett ok upphefr Skáldskaparmál ok kenningar eptir því sem fyrirfundit var í kvæðum hofuðskálda ok Snorri hefir síðan samanfæra látit'), even though this is here followed by a passage not thought to be part of Skáldskaparmál, extracts from which begin some three manuscript pages later (Óláfr Þórðarson was a nephew of Snorri and the author of The Third Grammatical Treatise). Skáldskaparmál was, however, the part of Snorri's Edda that both in the Middle Ages and later most attracted modifications and additions by various hands. Already Codex Wormianus (W) has (the remains of) a substantially revised version of the second part (the ókend heiti section, beginning at 83/13) and two fragmentary manuscripts (AM 748 I b 4to (A) and AM 757 a 4to (B)) contain extensively revised versions of various parts of Skáldskaparmál where the order has been much changed and additions have been made. The Utrecht manuscript (T) and AM 748 II 4to (C) have texts that do not differ much from that in the Codex Regius (R), which is taken to represent Snorri's work most accurately, though it is likely that scribal or editorial changes of various kinds have been made in all these versions. In particular it is uncertain whether Snorri intended the bulur (verses 412-517) to be included in Skáldskaparmál. The version in the Uppsala manuscript differs from the others in all parts of the Edda, but particularly in Skáldskaparmál, where various passages and verses are absent, the material is very differently ordered and the whole structure of the work is different. It is difficult to know whether these differences are due to a later redactor of Snorri's work or whether they derive from another version, perhaps a draft of the work, made by Snorri himself. It is unlikely, however, that the arrangement in the Uppsala manuscript gives a better idea of how Snorri intended the work to be than the Codex Regius does.

Even after the end of the Middle Ages, Skáldskaparmál continued to be the part of the Edda that attracted the most attention; it was influential on the language of rímur poets and others, and various revisions and adaptations of the work were made in the seventeenth century and later (see Faulkes 1977–9).

The verse quotations

The major part of Skáldskaparmál consists of lists of kennings and heiti provided for the use of 'young poets' (this purpose of the work is clearly stated at 5/25-30) illustrated from the work of more than 70 earlier poets (see the table below, pp. lv-lix, and cf. SnE 1931 xlvii-xlviii; Hallberg 1975, 5-6) with narratives (some in prose, some in verse) to explain the origin of some kennings. Unlike Háttatal, Skáldskaparmál contains no verse by Snorri himself. Some of the lists are derived from earlier versified lists such as are included in some manuscripts (but not in W or U) at the end of Skáldskaparmál (verses 412-517; more of these are included in A and B than in R, T and C); some versified lists are included in the body of the work (verses 325-31) and a rhythmical list is included at 106/23-107/11. These are likely to have been part of the learned activity of twelfth-century Icelandic compilers (Einarr Skúlason's poetry and eddic poems like Alvíssmál provide further evidence of this sort of activity), though of course it is possible that some of the bulur are actually compiled from Snorri's prose lists. Some lists of names are derived from eddic poems (e.g. 88/8, 90/1, 10-12 use Grímnismál 33, 37, 34) and Alvíssmál 20 and 30 are quoted as verses 332 and 380; Rígsþula seems to be used in the names for different kinds of men and women in chs 65-8. Rígspula itself is included in Codex Wormianus, and only there, where it is presumably an interpolation. Three stanzas from Bjarkamál are quoted for their lists of terms for gold (verses 188-90; only fragments are known of this poem, one of them in Heimskringla, Hkr II 361–2; two more are attributed to it in Edda Magnúsar Ólafssonar 265, 272; see Skj A I 180-81, B I 170-71). Many mythological names in Skáldskaparmál and the bulur also occur in Hyndluljóð, and in some cases nowhere else, though it is uncertain whether this poem is later than Snorri's Edda and makes use of it or the reverse. Grottasongr is quoted entire in R and T (and only there) in connection with the story of Fróði Friðleifsson which gives the origin of the kenning 'Fróði's meal' for gold (ch. 43). Like Rígsbula in W, this may be an interpolation. Many of the lists of kennings and heiti are of course simply compiled from their occurrences in the skaldic verses which are quoted; sometimes such verses are not quoted, however, and some of the kennings for sky and the sun in chs 23 and 26, for instance, are parts of kennings for God in Christian poems that are not always quoted there either; cf. 85/13–16 (see ch. 52 and Meissner 1921, 378–82). The little treatise on poetic language known as Den lille Skálda (in A and B; SnE 1848–87, II 428–31, 511–15), if older than Snorri's work, might have been a source, and there may have been other such compilations. Finnur Jónsson evidently assumed that Den lille Skálda was compiled from Snorri's work, and he printed at the foot of the pages of his edition references to the passages in Skáldskaparmál that may have been used in it, see SnE 1931, 255–9; cf. Finnur Jónsson 1920–24, II 926. Schedae by Sæmundr fróði have been suggested as a further source, see de Vries 1964–7, II 226 (see also 230 n. 130). But the majority of Snorri's sources must have been oral, and most others non-learned (no Latin sources can be demonstrated for any part of Skáldskaparmál except for the so-called Eptirmáli, 5/36–6/29; but some narratives are derived from vernacular sagas, see below).

Most of the illustrative quotations consist of half-stanzas attributed to named skaldic poets, though a few are anonymous. Some of these appear in other Icelandic books, especially Heimskringla and other versions of the Kings' Sagas (where usually whole stanzas are quoted) but the variations from the texts that appear in other sources imply that in Skáldskaparmál Snorri has quoted from memory or used oral variants; and it is likely that most of the other verses quoted that are not found elsewhere (and there are many of these) are similarly quoted from memory. Especially where the quotations are part of extensive poems, however, there is a possibility that Snorri or another had previously copied them into manuscripts, though no anthologies of skaldic verse and few complete poems have been preserved. Finnur Jónsson has pointed out (SnE 1931, xlviii) that a number of the poets quoted appear only in one section of the work, though there are also many that appear in both sections (i. e. the section on kennings and the one on ókend heiti). There does not seem to be any conclusion to be drawn from this.

Verses are seldom assigned to named poems in Skáldskaparmál, though many are believed to belong to long poems, flokkar or drápur. For instance, ten quotations in Skáldskaparmál are believed to be from Þjóðólfr Arnórsson's Sexstefja, but the poem itself is not named. It is therefore often difficult to be certain which poems verses belong to, and whether or not they are independent lausavísur (i. e. stanzas that are complete poems in themselves; many of the attributions in Skj are based on guesswork). Moreover when there is more than one poet of the same name, the patronymic or nickname is not always given, and some verses that are, for instance, attributed to 'Einarr' could be either by Einarr skálaglamm or Einarr Skúlason. In a few cases there are quotations without any attribution which may belong to the work of known poets and be parts of known poems.

There are some so-called 'mythological skaldic poems' quoted in Skáldskaparmál, mainly in connection with the lists of kennings for Pórr (also Iðunn): there are extensive extracts from Pórsdrápa, Húsdrápa, Haustlong and Ragnarsdrápa (the last two of these are Norwegian 'shield' poems, describing pictures on shields given the poets by patrons; Húsdrápa describes decorations in a hall in Iceland). Some verses from these poems are quoted elsewhere in the Prose Edda, but there are no quotations from these poems outside the work (except for quotations of single stanzas from Ragnarsdrápa in The Fourth Grammatical Treatise and Heimskringla as well as in Gylfaginning; there is also a quotation from Húsdrápa among the additions to Skáldskaparmál in W). It is uncertain whether Snorri himself intended these extended quotations to be included in Skáldskaparmál (they are not in all manuscripts), but obviously he knew the poems since he quotes individual verses from the poems as well and uses material from them in prose paraphrase in both Gylfaginning and Skáldskaparmál. They were probably composed in heathen times or in the period of transition to Christianity and were presumably known to Snorri from oral tradition, though their poor preservation and the abnormal spellings in the extant manuscripts suggest that they may have been copied from earlier poorly copied manuscripts.

The bulur

There are 106 stanzas contining pulur at the end of Skáldskaparmál in R, T and C and more in A and B. Some of these seem to have been sources for prose lists of kennings and heiti in Skáldskaparmál that are not all just compiled from examples in skaldic verse, but are evidently from earlier lists; cf. 85/13–15 (but note that A has Himins heiti þessi er hér eru ritin instead of þessi nofn himins eru rituð, en). The lists of names for the sky and sun that follow (85/17–20) are clearly partly based on the þulur in verses 516–17 (cf. also the additional þula of Himins heiti in A and B, Skj A I 683, and Alvíssmál 12, 16; few of the names are found in other extant poems, those that are being anyway in verse later than Snorri's Edda; see note to 85/13). Other prose lists in Skáldskaparmál that seem to be derived from bulur are those of names for bears (88/6-7, cf. verses 510-11); stags (88/8, cf. verse 512; also Grímnismál 33, see Gylfaginning ch. 16); the moon (85/21-2, cf. verse 11 in Skj A I 682-3 (Tungls heiti, in AB); the lists of words in chs 70-71 seem to be related to the bulur of Hugar heiti ok hjarta and Heiti á hendi in A, Skj A I 688–9; and there are other examples of the probable use of verse bulur. It is clear that it is not just the bulur in R that were used by the compiler of Skáldskaparmál, and not even those in the same form as they have in R (the order is often different, there are both additional words and omissions as well as variant forms); and those that are in R are not used exhaustively in Skáldskaparmál. On the other hand, Finnur Jónsson (SnE 1931, xlviii–xlix) assumed not only that Snorri did not use the bulur that are in R, but that the additional ones in A and B were later than his time anyway. Some of the bulur seem to be compiled from earlier extant sources. For instance, since the list of names of earth (85/23-87/7) is derived from the verse examples that accompany it, the bula in verses 501–2 may be derived partly from these too, though words are also included there that are not in other extant verse. The bula of rivernames in verses 479–84 is partly based on Grímnismál 27–29, or it may be the other way round. Only some of the river-names in the bulur are of mythical rivers mentioned in Gylfaginning and Grímnismál; others are geographical (cf. note to verses 479-84) and may be derived from actual geographical knowledge, and several are also among the names of Ægir's daughters, see 95/7-9 and note, and 36/25-6. The horses of the sun (90/1) and some of the serpentnames (90/11) are from Grímnismál 37, 34 (cf. also Grímnismál 30, Vafþrúðnismál 12, 14), and some of these names (and Grímnismál 34) have also appeared already in Gylfaginning chs 10–11, 16. The names for men (chs. 65-8) are partly from Rígspula, which also includes some of the names in verses 438-48. Weapon-names and ship-names seem in many cases to be derived from sagas, particularly fornaldarsögur. The list of sea-kings (i. e. kings whose territory was the sea; vikings who took the title of king, verses 412–16) contains names that appear elsewhere as names of semi-historical characters in poetry or prose narratives (e. g. Atli, Gjúki, Gylfi, Hagbarðr, Hjálmarr, Randvér) and this suggests that this list is no more than a list of legendary names. The coincidence of names of sea-kings, giants, dwarves and gods on the one hand, and of names of goddesses, giantesses, valkyries, norns and heroines of fornaldarsögur on the other, is probably due partly to the vagueness of these categories in Norse mythology generally, and partly to the random way in which lists of these kinds of beings were compiled.

Some of the bulur contain foreign words (Latin, French, Greek); this confirms their learned character and implies that they were mostly compiled in the twelfth century or later. They have their closest literary parallels in the work of Einarr Skúlason; cf. especially his lists of kennings for sea using names of islands, Ski A I 484–5, verses 11–14. Two of these are in A and all four are attributed to Einarr in Edda Magnúsar Ólafssonar 266-8. Magnús Ólafsson possibly found them in W, but more likely in some other medieval manuscript. There are further dróttkvætt verses of a similar kind containing terms for woman in U and A (SnE II 363, together with a verse of mansongr, and SnE II 490-91) and Málsháttakvæði is a collection of versified proverbs of a similar nature (Skj A II 130–36; in R after Háttatal). S. Bugge (1875, 237-42) suggested that both the bulur and Málsháttakvæði were the work of Bjarni Kolbeinsson, along with Jómsvíkinga drápa (Skj A II 1–10; also in R after Háttatal). This is not demonstrable, though it is true that these writings are all in a similar spirit. Also comparable are Haukr Valdísarson's Íslendingadrápa (Skj A I 556–60; in A) and Háttalykill (attributed to Earl Rognvaldr of Orkney and the Icelander Hallr Pórarinsson), and this group of writings may testify to the development of a particular kind of learned activity in Orkney. The bulur contain many words not actually found in poetry (and often not in prose either), so that their purpose as collections of names for use by poets is not always certain. Among their sources are skaldic verses as well as eddic poems, but also written prose sources and perhaps personal knowledge and travellers' accounts for the foreign geographical names; cf. Apardjón in verse 481. This is included as a river-name, but though it contains a river-name, it is actually derived from the name of the town of Aberdeen, 'At the mouth of the River Don', and it is likely that it is based on garbled personal knowledge of the place. Some of the verse bulur are, however, older than the twelfth century, e. g. presumably the lists of dwarfs in Voluspá and those of rivers and other items in Grímnismál; there are some similar lists in poems in Heiðreks saga and in Anglo-Saxon poems such as Widsiþ; the date of Alvíssmál must be regarded as uncertain. Many of the whalenames (some are obviously fabulous) in verses 489–90 are found in the chapter on whales in Konungs skuggsjá, though it is difficult to know how old such traditions are.

It seems clear that whether or not they were intended to be included as part of Skáldskaparmál, the bulur appended to the work in RTABC were not compiled by Snorri himself, and may have been added by another hand.

The dialogue frame

The scene is set in the first chapter, which parallels the second chapter of Gylfaginning, and it is probably based on the situation in Lokasenna (sometimes called Ægisdrekka, 'Ægir's feast'). This poem was certainly known to Snorri, for there are quotations from it in Gylfaginning, though in Skáldskaparmál it is mainly the prose introduction to the poem that is paralleled. The scene in both is a feast where the gods and Ægir are in the same hall (in Ásgarðr in Skáldskaparmál, in Ægir's hall in Lokasenna), and Snorri himself draws attention to the similarity in his prose account based on (the prose introduction to) Lokasenna in ch. 33 (41/1-2), where the feast does take place in Ægir's hall. There is hardly any mention of the speakers from ch. 2 onwards, however, and as in Háttatal the speakers' names are generally not given and the dialogue is not kept up to the end of the section. This part of Skáldskaparmál is in conception rather like Alvíssmál: both works are concerned with esoteric names and kennings for various concepts, and the narrative framework in both is definitely subsidiary, though the didactic content in both is presented with considerable artistry. Grímnismál too has similarities, though there the content seems to be purely informational (i. e. has no practical purpose).

The conversation between Bragi and Ægir in Skáldskaparmál is more artistic than that in Háttatal, like that in Gylfaginning, where the speakers are also given names and embryonic characters, though unlike Gylfaginning it is not rounded off with a conclusion. (There are verbal similarities with the introduction to the dialogue in Gylfaginning, compare 1/2–5 and Gylfaginning 7/20–27.) Ægir makes some comments on Bragi's narration that are comparable to those of Gylfi on the narrations of Hár, Jafnhár and Þriði (e. g. 3/9, 4/6, 24/17-18). Unlike that in Gylfaginning, where the dialogue is a contest, the content of the conversation in Skáldskaparmál has no real connection with the frame other than that Bragi, as god of poetry, is a suitable person to talk about the language of poetry and its origin (even though Óðinn is more often actually mentioned by poets and is the god who obtained the mead of poetry for the use of men); on the other hand it is not quite clear why Ægir should have been chosen for the role of questioner, except that the tradition of Ægir's feast for the gods in Lokasenna provides an ideal setting for the conversation; and being an outsider among the gods (he is usually regarded as one of the giants, a personification of one of the chaotic forces of nature) Ægir would be a suitable person to be instructed in the esoteric, sophisticated and civilised art of poetry. After the opening and the beginning of ch. 1, the references to Bragi and Ægir as speakers are mostly in the stories of Þórr's adventures, which may originally have been a separate section of Skáldskaparmál (as they are in U). If they were only later linked with the rest of Skáldskaparmál (which may like Háttatal originally have had unnamed speakers), this would explain why in the later part of Skáldskaparmál there are references to both in the third person.

As in Gylfaginning (14/2 and perhaps elsewhere) and Háttatal (e. g. 16/13–17) there are some places where the voice of the author seems to break into the conversation. For instance, there are references to the text as a written one at 73/31, 85/13-15 (see Glossary under rita and cf. Háttatal 11/9, 23/11, etc.). There are three phases to the conversation in Skáldskaparmál. After the scene-setting of 1/2-15, Bragi tells Ægir a story purportedly chosen at random about one of the exploits of the gods against the giants, at the end of which Bragi incidentally mentions that it gave rise to some kennings in poetry (3/5-8). This leads to Ægir's first question about poetry: he asks about its origin (3/10-11), and Bragi tells the myth of the origin of the mead of inspiration (3/12-5/8). Ægir then asks specifically about the language of poetry (5/9-10), and then begins the second phase: the analysis of poetic diction in the form of questions and answers, enumerating categories and sub-categories (5/9-24), in the same style as the beginning of Háttatal. The dialogue is then interrupted by a passage in the author's voice giving the purpose of the work, emphasising the mythological background to many of the kennings, and suggesting an allegorical origin for some myths in the story of the Trojan War (5/25-6/29). Then the conversation is apparently resumed (but to begin with, in chs. 2 and 3, with no mention of the speakers; only in B is ch. 3 said to be part of Bragi's speeches, though 6/30 seems to follow on from 5/24, see note to 6/32), and in this second phase kennings are enumerated according to their significations, beginning with those for Óðinn, and illustrated by numerous quotations from skaldic verse. The conversation from now on becomes perfunctory; the next actual question is at 14/25, from which point the dialogue is handled very much in the same way as in Háttatal, and various sections are introduced thus, without the speakers being identified (e. g. at the beginnings of chs 5–16). The speakers' names are only reintroduced again at the beginning and end of ch. 17, where further extended narrations (Þórr's exploits) interrupt the enumeration of kennings. Chs 17–18, which have rather little to do with the origins of kennings, are in U placed immediately after the first group of narratives and the interruption at 5/25-35; it may be that they were afterthoughts (cf. 20/18 n.), but in any case the desire to include more such narratives perhaps for their own sake (there are others later in Skáldskaparmál that are not all mythological ones) may have been one of the reasons that Snorri went on to compile Gylfaginning. When the dialogue is maintained after ch. 18, it is quite perfunctory, as it is in Háttatal, and the narrative frame seems to be forgotten. Both speakers are from time to time referred to in the dialogue in the third person (in chs 10, 22, 25, 27, 28, 32, 61), and one episode is related, in which both appear, which must have taken place after the conversation in which it is narrated (ch. 33; cf. note to 2/2-4). This suggests that phase two was not originally intended to be included in the frame of phase one, and that when they were joined together, the author neglected to make the changes that would have been necessary to avoid these absurdities. It is conceivable, but by no means certain, that the absurdities were deliberately intended as a joke or included for ironical purposes, to emphasise the fictional nature of the frame story. Phase three is the ókend heiti section (from 83/13), where the dialogue, when there is any trace of it at all, is entirely perfunctory, as in Háttatal, and towards the end is abandoned completely; there is no narrative conclusion. The last question is at 99/21. The bulur are clearly not intended to be part of the conversation. There are several more extended narratives in phases 2 (chs 33–5, Ægir's feast, the making of the gods' treasures; chs 39–42, Otrgjǫld and the Gjúkungar; chs 43–4, Fróði's mill, Hrólfr kraki; ch. 50, Hjaðningavíg) and 3 (ch. 64, the descendants of Hálfdan gamli); towards the end of phase 3 there are rather few verse illustrations (chs 65–74).

Skáldskaparmál is thus more varied in content and structure than either Gylfaginning or Háttatal; the organisation is not entirely coherent and this adds to the impression that the work was not completed by the author. In Skáldskaparmál some sections are organised with an introductory list of kennings for a particular concept, followed by a series of illustrations from earlier poets exemplifying these kennings in the same order as in the introductory list. But this is not always by any means carried out with regularity; there are many inconsistencies and much randomness, and it is not possible to dismiss all these as the result of the activity of interpolators or scribal interference (cf. SnE 1931, xliv-xlvii). Similarly, there are some verses adduced as examples of kennings that in fact contain none (see SnE 1931, xlv): verses 10 and 12 contain only ókend heiti for Óðinn; verse 20 contains no names or kennings except the name Óðinn itself; verse 14 has only the kenning sigrunnr, which is a generalised one for warrior, not a specific name for Óðinn; in verse 23 farmagnuðr only refers to Óðinn in the particular situation of flying to escape Pjazi. The fact that some of these verses are not in all manuscripts is no argument for their being interpolations; it is more likely that some scribes omitted them when they realised that they did not contain the expected kennings. There are similar inconsistencies in the ókend heiti section of Skáldskaparmál, where kennings are sometimes listed alongside heiti (see notes to 87/8–9, 90/16–17, 26-9, 95/1, 108/6-9, 109/8-9); there is no reason there either to explain the inconsistencies as due to scribes rather than to the author's incomplete working out of his scheme (cf. 95/7–9 n.).

The Uppsala manuscript has a less consistent division of Skáldskaparmál into kennings and heiti than some other manuscripts, and for instance has chs 50, 34–6, 39–40, 43–5 after the section on ókend heiti (SnE II 339–355), though many of the other chapters dealing with kennings come before (see pp. xl–xliv below). If U represents an earlier stage in the evolution of Skáldskaparmál than other manuscripts, this perhaps indicates that the division into ken-nings and heiti only occurred to the author after he had assembled most of his material; though the material was then arranged roughly into two sections, many remnants of the undifferentiated treatment survived at various points in the compilation, particularly in the ókend heiti section. Of course it is also possible that the last chapters in Skáldskaparmál in U, which also contain some extended narratives, represent material that came to hand later, when the bulk of the compilation was complete.

The prose narratives

There is very little to be added to Finnur Jónsson's summary of the sources of these in SnE 1931, liv-lvi. Like the stories in Gylfaginning, those in Skáldskaparmál are in many cases derived from eddic poems, though in some cases they are taken from or influenced by skaldic mythological poems such as Pórsdrápa, Ragnarsdrápa, Húsdrápa, Haustlong (or references to mythology in kennings in skaldic verse); in some cases parts of these verse sources are quoted. (Genealogical poems such as Ynglingatal, Háleygjatal and Nóregskonungatal seem not to be used in Skáldskaparmál.) Other stories are from learned prose writings of the twelfth or early thirteenth centuries such as the mainly lost Skjoldunga saga (which may also have been used in the first chapter of Gylfaginning as well as in its Prologue). As with Gylfaginning, it is difficult to gauge the extent to which Snorri may have been dependent in Skáldskaparmál on oral prose stories, either instead of verse sources or to supplement them. Where supposed Celtic motifs come into his narratives (for instance Sigurðr gaining knowledge from sucking his finger, or the everlasting battle motif in the Hjaðningavíg; cf. Saxo Grammaticus 1979– 80, II 75, 84-5) it is likely that his knowledge came from (via) written sources such as versions of Volsunga saga and Skjoldunga saga rather than oral ones.

The opening frame story that introduces the speakers through whose words the following narratives are presented is probably based mainly on the situation described in Lokasenna (see p. xviii above); the preparation for the feast of the gods is described in Hymiskviða.

1/16–2/37 tells the story of how the Æsir slew Þjazi, which is the subject of part of Haustlong (with the text of which the prose account has some striking verbal correspondences). This is quoted in verses

92–104, though it seems likely that Snorri would have had other sources for the story too. Hárbarðsljóð 19 has a rather different version of the conclusion of this affair. The story of how Þjazi and his brothers shared their inheritance (3/1–5) is not told elsewhere, though kennings based on it are widespread (cf. verse 150; see Meissner 1921, 227–8).

A version of the story of the origin of the mead of poetry (3/10–5/8) appears also in Hávamál 104–10. Though this cannot have been Snorri's only source, conceivably some of the differences in his account may be the result of his own rationalisation and expansion of the Hávamál account. The story is alluded to in many skaldic kennings, though it is not certain that they all originate in heathen times (see Frank 1981).

The account of the Trojan war (5/36–6/29) could be derived from Trójumanna saga, and thus ultimately based on Latin versions of Homer (see Faulkes 1978–9, 119 n. 127), though it differs considerably from the saga in details. In fact the name Volukrontem at 6/3 seems to connect this account particularly with the version of the saga in Hauksbók (though this book was of course compiled later than Skáldskaparmál; see Faulkes 1978–9, 122).

The story of Porr and Hrungnir (20/17–22/19) appears also in Haustlong (quoted in verses 65–71), but it seems likely that Snorri knew other versions too. The beginning of the story and 22/20–32 seem to have no parallel in extant sources.

The story of Þórr and Geirrøðr (24/19–25/34) seems to be based mainly on Pórsdrápa (quoted in verses 73–91, as well as in verses 44 and 53), though the quotation of a fragment of a poem in ljóðaháttr (verse 72; another in U, 25/27 n.) implies that there was an eddic poem that related this story too, and Snorri's account does not follow Pórsdrápa closely. The story has reflexes in Saxo Grammaticus Book VIII (1979–80, II 142, 144–5) and there may have been many versions current in Scandinavia (cf. McKinnell 1994, 57–86).

The story of Ægir entertaining the Æsir (40/32-41/10) may have been suggested by $Hymiskvi\partial a$, though it is mainly based on the scene of Lokasenna, which may thus have been the model for this as well as for the frame of $Sk\acute{a}ldskaparm\acute{a}l$. The peculiarity is that this event is said to be a return visit by the Æsir three months after the conversation of which the narration of ch. 33 still seems to be part. This may be another indication that the idea of the frame to $Sk\acute{a}ldskaparm\acute{a}l$ was only developed after much of the work had been compiled, and the compiler forgot that he had included an account of events that could not have been part of Bragi's original narrative; but in that case, it is still odd that at 40/32–3 there is a reference to the frame story at the beginning of Skáldskaparmál.

The note in 41/22–4 is clearly based on verse 142, another verse in ljóðaháttr that is probably derived from an otherwise lost eddic poem.

The account of Loki's cutting off of Sif's hair and the creation of the gods' treasures that result (41/29–43/10) has no parallel in extant sources, and it is difficult to know whether it was derived from lost poems or from oral prose stories. The account of the origin of Draupnir's magic properties conflicts with that in Gylfaginning 47.

The story of Otrgjold and the Gjúkungar (45/3–50/21) has parallels in Volsunga saga and the Poetic Edda; it seems likely that the compiler knew not only the poems of the latter (he quoted two verses of Fáfnismál (32–3) in verses 151–2), but also some version of the prose links (or the stories part in prose and part in verse) that appear in the Codex Regius (cf. especially PE 173). It is also probable that he knew (an earlier version of) Volsunga saga as well, though the Sigurðar saga he refers to in Háttatal 35/13 need not have been a written saga, and the fact that the story of Otrgjold and the Gjúkungar is not in all manuscripts of Skáldskaparmál has been taken to strengthen the possibility that it is a later interpolation, which need not have been written earlier than the extant Volsunga saga. But the details of the Skáldskaparmál account indicate that no one extant source has been used exclusively. Ragnarsdrápa is quoted in verses 153-8, but not many details in the prose account seem to be derived from that. The version of the story of Jormunrekkr's proxy wooing of Svanhildr and the role of his son Randvér (which seems to show the influence of the Tristram story) link the Skáldskaparmál account particularly with Volsunga saga.

The story of the mill Grotti is clearly based mainly on Grottasongr, quoted in R and T (verses 159–82) and not found elsewhere, so that the poem itself may be an interpolation, though Snorri must have known it. The introductory prose however probably also contains information from Skjoldunga saga, and it may have been there that Snorri found the text of the poem, too.

The Hrólfr kraki stories (58/4–59/32) must also be derived from Skjǫldunga saga (cf. Skjǫldunga saga 42, Hkr I 57; much of the story—but with important differences—also appears in the later Hrólfs saga kraka). The Bjarkamál verses (188–90) could also be from Skjǫldunga saga (on which see ÍF XXXV, xix–lxx).

The account of Holgi (60/10–13) may come from a lost Hlaðajarla saga (cf. ÍF XXVI, xvi and Finnur Jónsson 1920–24, II 633).

The Hjaðningar story (72/1–31) may be derived from Skjǫldunga saga; the account in Ragnarsdrápa, quoted in verses 250–54, can scarcely be the only source of Snorri's knowledge of the story. There is another account in Sǫrla þáttr in Flateyjarbók (I 304–13) which differs greatly from these two and is probably a later development of the legend.

The account of Hálfdan gamli and his descendants (101/10-24 and 103/1-17, see notes; many of the names appear in the bula of names for king in SnE 1848–87, II 469) is related to the genealogical passages in Flateyjarbók I 22–30 (Hversu Noregr byggðist, which prefaces Óláfs saga Tryggvasonar) and these are related to Funding Noregr, Flb I 241–3; the latter is the introduction to Orkneyinga saga, ÍF XXXIV 2-7. All three may be derived from a common earlier (twelfth-century?) source, which was perhaps a saga like Skjǫldunga saga (see Faulkes 1993a, 61). The account is comparable to the last part of Heiðreks saga (59-63) and Af Upplendinga konungum in Hauksbók 1892-6, 456-7. Many of the names and some narrative details appear in Hyndluljóð 14-16, but it does not look as though this was a direct source, though its existence suggests the possibility that there could have been other poems like it that may have contained some of the information Snorri gives about the descendants of Hálfdan. Cf. Clunies Ross 1983, 60, where it is claimed that Hversu Noregr byggðist is 'almost certainly' later than both Fundinn Noregr and Snorri's Edda; and IF XXXIV, ix-xvi, where Finnbogi Guðmundsson suggests that the introductory chapters to Orkneyinga saga were compiled by Snorri Sturluson himself.

The analysis of poetic diction

The major part of Skáldskaparmál is devoted to the exemplification of kennings and heiti (arranged roughly into these two categories) for various concepts. Relatively little space is devoted to theoretical analysis of poetic diction or to comment. It is only in two passages, the first at the beginning of Skáldskaparmál (ch. 1, 5/9–24), the second at the very end (chs 67–68, 107/12–108/5) that Snorri actually discusses his categories. And as far as the language of poetry goes, his categories are actually rather few: they are kenning, heiti, and the parallel phrases kent heiti and ókent heiti; við(r)kenning, sannkenning, and fornafn; ofljóst (ch. 74, 109/11–22) and nýgervingar (41/11–17); nykrat he only mentions in Háttatal in opposition to nýgervingar. (The most important earlier analyses of Snorri's categories are Brodeur 1952 and Halldór Halldórsson 1975; cf. also Clunies Ross 1987; Faulkes 1994.)

Of these nine main terms that Snorri uses to describe poetical language, $vi\delta(r)kenning$ is least problematical. He uses it only in one passage, in chs 67-68 of Skáldskaparmál, and both his definition (107/13-14) and the examples he gives make it clear that he uses it to mean kennings referring to people (men and women) by their possessions or relationships (including those of friendship and enmity). But it is also clear that nearly all kennings for people which are designed to specify an individual person are in this category. Other kinds of kenning like 'tree of weapons' cannot usually designate a particular person, only a member of the class of warriors. (Incidentally it should be noted that even when Snorri lists kennings as expressions for 'man' or 'woman', most of them as they are actually used in verse refer to individuals, whether they mention individual characteristics or not; they rarely in fact replace common nouns.) The term $vi\delta(r)$ kenning presumably relates to Snorri's phrase at kenna einhvern við eitthvert, 'to refer to someone in terms of something', when that something is generally a relative or a possession or other attribute. (The term $vi\delta(r)$ kenning as Snorri uses it cannot have anything to do with the same term as used by religious writers to mean 'confession (of faith)'. Cf. Glossary under kenning.)

Sannkenning is more difficult because Snorri uses the term both in Skáldskaparmál ch. 67 and in Háttatal, and apart from the question of whether the commentary to Háttatal is by the same author as Skáldskaparmál, it is not entirely certain whether one can assume that Snorri was absolutely consistent in his use of such terms over all his writings. In Skáldskaparmál he gives as examples of sannkenningar references to people as having certain qualities of character (107/26–8; the terms used here are nearly all compound nouns) while in Háttatal he uses the term to refer to the use of attributives (whether with nouns for persons or inanimate objects) and also to the use of adverbials (Háttatal 3/9–5/11).

In spite of the etymology of the term sannkenningar (= 'true kennings'), it does not seem that Snorri is contrasting literalness with the use of metaphor; some of his examples of sannkenningar would probably be analysed by modern readers as metaphorical, and moreover it is not in connection with sannkenningar that Snorri discusses metaphor. The element sann- in the term as it is used in Skáldskaparmál seems to be related to the idea of the essential nature of the persons referred to (i. e. what they are truly like), in the term as used in Háttatal to the verb sanna in the sense of 'affirm' (since the examples are mostly of affirmatory or intensive attributives and adverbs; they refer to what can truly be said to be the case). In distinguishing við(r)kenningar and sannkenningar Snorri is attempting to distinguish descriptions based on accidents and those based on essences in the Aristotelian sense (compare the terms viðrnefni 'surname, soubriquet' and sannnefni 'accurate, appropriate name'); all his examples of $vi\delta(r)$ kenningar seem to describe people in terms of their 'accidental' attributes (possessions, relationships) while his examples of sannkenningar both in Skáldskaparmál and Háttatal are of descriptions in terms of inherent or innate qualities. In Skáldskaparmál all the examples are descriptions of people, but in Háttatal some of them are of things or actions. In both parts of the work, most of the examples of sannkenningar are not kennings at all in the modern sense of the word since they are not constructed with the use of base-words and determinants. In The Third Grammatical Treatise, sannkenning is said to be the Norse name for epitheton, and some of the examples there relate to essential characteristics, but some to accidents; most are attributive adjectives, often compound ones: see TGT 100, 103 (here it is an error for mannkenningar) and 107–8.

Very many of Snorri's examples of kennings do not contain metaphor. He does, however, on a few occasions draw attention to metaphorical expressions, his term for which seems to be nýgervingar (nýgjorvingar). This term has also caused some confusion because of its etymology. It appears in four passages in Skáldskaparmál (see Glossary) and in one passage in Háttatal (5/12–6/16), and again seems to be used slightly differently in the two parts of the work. In neither does it refer to neologisms, rather it seems to mean either the making of new meanings for words (i. e. metaphors) or the construction of new (metaphorical) kennings. In the examples in Háttatal this is done mainly by varying the base-word in kennings, in Skáldskaparmál by varying the determinant (or both). At Skáldskaparmál 41/7–17 there is the most detailed definition, and there nýgerving is said to be the substitution of synonyms or near-synonyms for the determinant, so that gold can be called fire of Ægir, and then by substitution fire of the sea, lakes, rivers or brooks. 'Því er þat kallat nýgervingar alt er út er sett heiti lengra en fyrr finnsk' ('For this reason it is all called nýgervingar when the term is extended further than there are earlier examples of'). Here Snorri is describing how by substitution of words of related meaning, the correspondence between the literal meaning of the kenning and what it actually refers to becomes remoter, so that the meaning of words is so to speak extended; but it is interesting that he is imagining that this happens chiefly through word-substitution rather than through the use of metaphor or allegory in the usual senses of those terms. The other examples in Skáldskaparmál are slightly different: at 74/5-6 kennings for weapons are developed from land of weapons = shield to hail or rain of the land of weapons. (Extending the kenning with several determinants is called rekit here as in Háttatal.) At 108/14, 16, 37 the examples are of the creation of new kennings for parts of the body by analogy (ears = mouth or eyes of the hearing; mouth = ship of words, the lips the gunwale of the ship, the tongue the oar or rudder; arm = shoulder's leg). The example in Háttatal is similar to these last ones, in that an example is given (the only actual verse exemplification in the Edda—from Snorri's own poem—of nýgerving) of how the metaphors may be developed though a stanza: the sword conceived as a snake, the scabbard as its path, the fittings its slough, the blood its drink (a river that it seeks), the victim's breast its route; the verbs are also chosen to fit these concepts. Thus the metaphors here are extended or continued throughout the stanza (so that he is almost producing allegory), and Snorri contrasts the coherence of his example with what he calls nykrat, where conflicting metaphors for the same concept are used in the same stanza. He does not give examples of this, though they can be found particularly in poems in kviðuháttr (and in Egill Skallagrímsson's Hofuðlausn; see Háttatal pp. 50 and 84). But the emphasis in Skáldskaparmál is on the creation of new kennings, or perhaps on metaphorical kennings in general, rather than on extended metaphor. (On nýgervingar and nykrat in Old Norse verse see Marold 1993.) Snorri says that nykrat is thought to be a blemish (Háttatal 6/16), and in Skáldskaparmál 41/17 he emphasises that nýgervingar are thought to be all right when they are in accordance with verisimilitude and nature—one of his few evaluatory comments on kennings which suggests accord with the classical idea of restraint and conformity to nature found, for example, at the beginning of Horace's Ars Poetica where monstrosities (i. e. representations contrary to nature) are condemned. In TGT 80 nykrat or finngálknat is said to be one kind of cacemphaton found especially in nýgervingar (cf. also FoGT 131).

It is the term fornafn that has provoked the most discussion. The word is used (in the plural) in Háttatal in its ordinary grammatical sense of 'pronoun' in the prose after stanza 1. In Skáldskaparmál the term appears twice, without explanation in ch. 1, and in ch. 67. It is clear that there the term is used for references to people which replace their proper names (as opposed to terms that can refer to any person, i. e. replacements for common nouns); these replacements for proper names are what classical rhetoricians, whether Snorri knew it or not, sometimes called not pronouns but pronominatio (a description pro nomine; though commoner was the Greek term antonomasia). It is also clear that sannkenningar can be one kind of fornafn, and $vi\delta(r)$ kenningar seem to be another. These are therefore not exclusive or contrastive terms, but overlapping ones. Some (though not all) sannkenningar and við(r)kenningar are varieties of fornafn, and there are presumably others. Note that in the Uppsala manuscript (SnE II 346) the section on fornofn corresponding to Skáldskaparmál ch. 67 begins not as in the Codex Regius 'enn eru bau heiti er menn láta ganga fyrir nofn manna' (107/12), but 'enn eru þær kenningar er menn láta ganga fyrir nofn manna; þat kollum vér fornofn manna'; nevertheless it seems clear from the examples in both manuscripts that some fornofn are kennings and some are ókend heiti-though it is true that there are no unequivocal examples of ókend heiti among them. The equivalent term to fornafn in modern Icelandic is sérkenning, but Snorri does not use that term.

It is significant that these three terms, sannkenningar, við(r)kenningar and fornafn, occur in connection with kennings for man and woman, after a section listing common nouns that can be used for the class of human beings in general, i. e. terms that are not specific in application, and that they come under the general heading of 'terms that are put in place of men's names' ('bau heiti er menn láta ganga fyrir nofn manna', 107/12). Again it seems that Snorri's principal interest is in terms that can be used to refer to particular people in skaldic poetry. The explanation for this must be that Snorri saw skaldic poetry primarily as praise poetry (the sentence at 67/28–9 seems to imply this, and most of his own verse seems to have been of this kind). So Snorri's emphasis on kennings and heiti for persons is probably due to his seeing skaldic poetry as mainly concerned with the praise of persons (human and divine), and kennings and heiti principally as means of referring to the subjects of the poems. This is in fact the commonest use he himself makes of kennings in Háttatal, where the majority of his kennings refer to King Hákon and Earl Skúli. (Háttatal contains roughly 120 kennings for ruler, referring to King Hákon and Earl Skúli, and 25 referring to men more generally; there are 5 for gods, 29 for parts of the body, 61 for weapons, 29 for ships, 30 for gold, 32 for battle, 23 for parts of the natural world (earth, sea etc.), 5 for animals, and about 23 others.)

This could also be the reason why he does not give examples of kennings or heiti for giants, though there are lists of giant-names in the bulur at the end of Skáldskaparmál and many kennings for giants in some of the poems quoted, e. g. in Pórsdrápa, see note to verses 73-91. As Snorri says in ch. 31 of Skáldskaparmál (40/15), when names of giants are used in kennings for men, this is mostly as satire or criticism (though he quotes no examples of this; see sómmiðjungr in Glossary). Since he is mainly concerned with praise poetry, he has little use for references to giants. It is important to remember that Snorri's Edda is not a treatise on earlier Norse poetry; it is a book of instruction for young poets of his day illustrated from the work of earlier poets. It was no part of the requirement of young poets in the thirteenth century to be able to compose about giants (or indeed to write satire): their function was to learn to praise kings. It is this that determines the content of the Prose Edda, which not surprisingly does not well represent or cover the whole range of skaldic verse, and generally concentrates on the kinds of kennings that would be most useful for praising kings.

This is also probably the reason why Snorri shows so little interest in metaphor and figures of speech. He sees poetical language largely in terms of substitutions of one name for another, rather than in terms of transference of meaning. The latter he describes as nýgervingar and exemplifies in a number of places in both Skáldskaparmál and Háttatal, but always with the implication that it is somewhat exceptional. Even kennings which seem to us obviously metaphorical, such as when gold is called fire of the sea or poetry the ship of the dwarfs as well as ale of dwarfs, are explained by Snorri in terms of substitutions, and the fundamental kenning type as arising from the events of a particular story. That is, a word for sea may be substituted for the name Ægir as a variation on the kenning-type 'fire of Ægir', based according to Snorri on the story of how Ægir used gold as a source of light when he entertained the Æsir to a feast (Skáldskaparmál ch. 33); and lið/líð was a word for ale and for vessel, so that other words for ship could be used as a variation of the kenning-type 'mead of the dwarfs' which arose from an episode in the story of the origin of poetry (Skáldskaparmál ch. 3, 14/18–20). In his account of the origin of the mead of poetry at the beginning of Skáldskaparmál, however, Snorri seems to favour a metaphorical interpretation of the latter: 'kollum vér skáldskap . . . farskost dverga, fyrir því at sá mjoðr flutti þeim fjorlausn ór skerinu', 4/1–4. Indeed Snorri's interest in word-play, which he calls ofljóst, both as a device in itself and as a generator of kennings, does not seem to be justified by its frequency in recorded verse (see in particular Skáldskaparmál ch. 74 and Háttatal stanzas 17-23), while he gives rather little space to metaphor (Háttatal stanza 6 and the commentary on it, 41/10–17, 74/5–6, 108/14–17, 37–8).

It also seems somewhat odd that Snorri consistently 'explains' kennings, and heiti too, as having their origin in stories or events, and scarcely seems to acknowledge other sources of poetical language (such as e. g. picture language or symbolism, metaphor or metonymy, or archaisms or loan-words from other languages). His concept of causation is still largely mythological. Indeed he seems to dismiss 'imagination' as a source of poetical language by his insistence that it must be in accordance with líkindum ok eðli, 'verisimilitude and nature' (41/17; cf. his criticism of mixed metaphors as nykrat 'monstrous', Háttatal 6/16).

There seems to be no difference in Snorri's usage between the terms nafn and heiti. They are apparently interchangeable both in his usage and that of his scribes, who have sometimes substituted one for the other, e. g. 83/14 (heiti R, nofn TAU), 85/13–14 (cf. SnE 1848–87, II 460), 99/21–2 (cf. SnE 1848–87, II 604), as indeed does Finnur Jónsson in his 1931 edition, who tries by emendation rather unsuccessfully to impose consistency on his text, e. g. in the first few sentences of chs 54 and 64 of Skáldskaparmál. But at the beginning of ch. 55 all manuscripts introduce the list of ókend heiti for gods as nofn; the section on names for the heavens (ch. 56) is introduced 'Pessi nofn himins eru rituð, en eigi hofum vér fundit í kvæðum oll þessi heiti; en þessi skáldskaparheiti . . .'--and the following list includes both kend and ókend nofn. One might have expected that Snorri would reserve one of these labels (nafn or heiti) for the normal or natural name for things, and the other for specifically poetical terms or secondary names, and thus contrast for instance the name Óðinn with his alternative names such as Hár or Grímnir and the term hestr 'horse' with fákr 'steed', but he does not use separate terms for these different kinds of names. Nor does he make a terminological distinction between what we call proper names (names of people) and common nouns (names of things) although he spends more time on the former, and seems to use the terms $vi\delta(r)$ kenning and fornafn only for references to people; and he does use the term einkarnafn of proper names of possessions such as ships (107/25). There is one place in Skáldskaparmál where Snorri does discuss the problem of kennings that can only indicate a class of persons, not an individual, i. e. those that are substitutions for common nouns rather than proper nouns; this is in ch. 53, in the account of kennings for kings: 'Par koma saman kenningar, ok verðr sá at skilja af stoð, er ræðr skáldskapinn, um hvárn kveðit er konunginn, þvíat rétt er at kalla Miklagarðs keisara Grikkja konung, ok svá þann konung er ræðr Jórsalalandi, at kalla Jórsala konung, svá ok at kalla Róms konung Rómaborgar keisara eða Engla konung þann er Englandi ræðr. En sú kenning er áðr var ritat, at kalla Krist konung manna, þá kenning má eiga hverr konungr. Konunga alla er rétt at kenna svá at kalla þá landráðendr.' But Snorri does not use special terms to distinguish kennings for common nouns from those for proper nouns, though $vi\delta(r)$ kenning and fornafn usually refer to the latter. In ch. 64 he lists common nouns for ruler that are derived from proper nouns (according to his explanation of their origin—a sort of reverse substitution, the opposite of pronominatio), such as Pengill, Gramr, Skilfingr, Ynglingr, but even here he does not use a term to distinguish common nouns from proper nouns. Indeed in Skáldskaparmál it is often difficult to tell which is which, for instance with items such as $J\varrho r\delta/j\varrho r\delta$ and many of the names in the bulur. The distinction between common and proper nouns is not dealt with at all clearly by Margaret Clunies Ross (1987, 33, 66, 95-6, 102-7), who assumes too readily that Snorri was trying to make the distinction, and both she and Halldór Halldórsson assume that his terminology somehow reflects that of Latin grammarians. The latter (1975, 15; cf. 17 and 21) takes ókend heiti to mean the same as verbum proprium as used by Quintilian.

It is apparent from the examples Snorri gives not only that most kennings for people are $vi\delta(r)$ kenningar, but also that most kennings for individuals are fornofn: expressions where the name of the person referred to is not used. Við(r)kenningar and fornafn are overlapping sub-categories of kennings and are usually kend heiti; all kennings and ókend heiti are sub-categories of the general class of heiti or nofn. Only the pair kend heiti and ókend heiti are exclusive categories. After his initial description of the kenning in ch. 1, Snorri returns three times in Skáldskaparmál to the description of kennings for persons in terms of substitutions for their names by means of references to their activities or attributes, in ch. 20: 'Svá má kenna allar Asynjur at nefna annarrar nafni ok kenna við eign eða verk sín eða ættir'; in ch. 22: 'Ásu er svá rétt at kenna at kalla einnhvern annars nafni ok kenna við verk sín eða eign eða ættir'; and ch. 31: '[mann] skal kenna við verk sín, þat er hann veitir eða þiggr eða gerir . . . til eignar sinnar þeirar er hann á ok svá ef hann gaf, svá ok við ættir þær er hann kom af, svá þær er frá honum kómu . . . Konu er ok rétt at kenna við alla athofn sína eða við eign sína eða ætt' (cf. also 107/25). It is clear that Snorri is particularly interested in this kind of kenning, and that he in a sense thinks of it as the normal kind of kenning.

The term heiti moreover does not mean the same as 'at nefna hvern hlut sem heitir' (5/17) which seems to refer to the use of simplex terms whether poetical or not, while both heiti and nafn often refer to compound descriptions like kennings. So, at the beginning of the ókend heiti section of Skáldskaparmál (83/13-14), ókend setning skáldskapar, 'the rule for poetry without periphrasis', is defined as 'at nefna hvern hlut sem heitir', and paraphrased by the term ókend heiti. (Incidentally when Halldór Halldórsson (1975, 14) takes setning at 83/13 as a synonym for heiti he must be mistaken; the word means 'rule' there as elsewhere.) When introducing various kinds of kennings in Skáldskaparmál, Snorri frequently describes them as heiti (4/7, 6/31, 11/26, 60/18). Ch. 2 begins: 'Enn skal láta heyra dæmin hvernig hofuðskáldin hafa látit sér sóma at yrkja eptir þessum heitum ok kenningum.' Ch. 3 begins 'Hér skal heyra hvé skáldin hafa kent skáldskapinn eptir þessum heitum er áðr eru rituð, svá sem er at kalla Kvasis dreyra' (there follow examples of kennings). The verses from Bjarkamál in ch. 45 illustrating kennings for gold are introduced 'Í Bjarkamálum inum fornum eru tolð morg gulls heiti.' Moreover there is not an absolute separation of the categories of kenning and ókend heiti in Skáldskaparmál; in many chapters in the section on kennings, verses are included that contain only ókend heiti (e. g. verse 20 in ch. 2) and simplex names are listed (e. g. in ch. 53), and conversely in the section on ókend heiti that begins in ch. 54, kennings are frequently listed and exemplified (ch. 56, names for the heavens; ch. 58, names for wolf; ch. 69, names for parts of the body). One explanation may be that Snorri left his work in Skáldskaparmál unfinished and disordered, and intended to separate the lists of kennings and ókend heiti more consistently, or it may be that in his classification other distinctions were more important than the simple one between kennings and ókend heiti; but it seems inescapable that in Snorri's usage the term heiti (and nafn) is an inclusive one, meaning any appellative term whether simple or compound, literal or metaphorical, referring to an individual or a class, normal or poetical.

Snorri uses the term kenning to refer to a structural device, whereby a person or object is indicated by a periphrastic description containing two or more terms (which can be a noun with one or more dependent genitives or a compound noun or a combination of these two structures). This is clearest in his definition of the term in Háttatal in the commentary to verse 2, where he unequivocally describes the kenning as containing a base-word and one or more determinants (though he does not have separate terms for these latter concepts; cf. kenna við, kenna til in Glossary). His terminology in describing extended kennings (rekit) also makes this clear: 'At reka til hinnar fimtu kenningar' (Háttatal 8/29) means to extend a kenning to the fifth determinant (in this phrase kenning seems to mean the determinant itself). The verb kenna means 'to use a kenning' (Háttatal 1/53), 'to use a determinant' (at kenna rétt, 6/9), or 'to denote or express by means of a kenning' (kenna [manns] nafn, 8/38-9; see kenna, kenning in Glossaries to Háttatal and Skáldskaparmál). In Háttatal, however, sannkenna and sannkenning refer not to the use of base-words and determinants, but to the use of attributives and adverbials with nouns, adjectives and verbs.

The analysis of the kinds of poetical expression in Skáldskaparmál ch. 1 is found in only four of the independent manuscripts of Snorri's Edda besides the Codex Regius. The Utrecht manuscript and Codex Wormianus, as usual, have texts almost identical to that of the Codex Regius, and it is only in these that the well-known three-fold division into kennings, heiti and fornofn is found. In the Uppsala manuscript (SnE 1848–87, II 296) the only categories are kent and ókent, of which only the first is defined and exemplified at this point. In AM 757 a 4to (SnE 1848-87, II 532) the passage is garbled and the category of kenning is omitted. No one has succeeded in explaining adequately the relationships between the various manuscripts of the Prose Edda, and there is no single stemma that can reflect all the evidence. The Codex Regius is assumed to be the best text mainly because it is the most complete, and has fewest passages that are obvious interpolations. The text of the Uppsala manuscript is often unclear and muddled, but it is far from certain that all the muddle is due to scribal interference with Snorri's text. It is also much shorter. The best explanation of it is probably that it is derived from an unfinished draft of the work, maybe on loose sheets of parchment, which someone has tried to order without great success. Alternatively it may be that the text of the Uppsala manuscript was in many places derived from Snorri's notes for lectures on poetry, or even from notes on his lectures made by one of his audience. In particular the arrangement of Háttatal in the Uppsala manuscript which begins with a list of the names of the various metres accompanied by (generally) the first line only of the verses exemplifying them looks like an aide-mémoire to recital. The Codex Regius may be derived from a more complete version of the Prose Edda, but has very likely also been tidied up by a later hand. It may be therefore that the Uppsala text's twofold division of poetical language was Snorri's first try at analysis, and that the category of fornafn was added later. This could explain why the fornafn is not exemplified until the very end of Skáldskaparmál, and then not very clearly, and why it does not feature except in its grammatical sense in Háttatal. Snorri's categories show signs of being an emerging system, not fully worked out, rather than a completely formulated one. If this is so, it follows that it cannot have been the usual way of referring to the categories of poetical language before Snorri's day.

Investigation of what Snorri meant by his terms must be based on his usage and exemplification; one must not be led astray by the supposed etymology of these terms. For this reason I doubt the relevance of kenning in the meaning 'teaching' to the understanding of the term as Snorri uses it as the name of a grammatical device. If any of the non-technical meanings of the verb kenna are relevant to the understanding of the noun kenning it is the meaning 'attribute', since kennings are generally nouns with attributives accompanying them in some form (cf. the term kenningarnafn 'nickname, surname'). Similarly the meaning of heiti in Modern Icelandic is not necessarily the key to its meaning in Snorri's Edda; the key is the context in which Snorri uses the term. The category of heiti is inclusive of all Snorri's other categories (grammatically it concerns only the noun phrase), and these other categories overlap each other; they are not discrete or exclusive. Thus the kenning is a type of heiti, and some kennings are either sannkenningar or viðkenningar; many heiti in each of these categories are fornofn, and some involve ofljóst. The kenning is characterised by its structure, while the other categories relate to types of content or meaning, the way in which they relate to their referents. Snorri's categories seem pragmatic and ad hoc; he appears not to be concerned to give an exhaustive classification of the kinds of poetical language, either of poetical terms or of types of kenning. They reflect his very particular interests rather than any desire to give a full account of the art of poetry.

There is very little evidence that Snorri was influenced by classical rhetorical theory in Skáldskaparmál, except in his adoption of the term fornafn for pronominatio. His description of the kenning finds its closest parallel in a passage in Aristotle's Poetics, but it is highly unlikely that he could have known that work either directly or indirectly (see Faulkes 1993a, 63–4). He has a small range of rhetorical devices that he exemplifies and shows little interest in the usual classical figures of speech, even metaphor and metonymy.

Although Snorri includes the story of Óðinn's winning of the mead of poetry from the giants and giving it to the Æsir and to poets and scholars (4/6–5/8), there is little other indication that he regarded poetry as an inspirational activity. Even the mead of poetry is perhaps best regarded as bestowing a skill or accomplishment (îprótt 3/10, verse 16/1) rather than inspiration. It is anyway what the poet produces, not that from which the poetry proceeds (see Faulkes 1997, 5–6). Both in Skáldskaparmál and Háttatal the emphasis seems to be on the craftsmanship of verse-making and the ability to embellish utterances. The phrase fólgit í rúnum (3/9; cf. 3/6–7) suggests an idea that poetical language is intended to conceal meaning rather than to reveal it; that the language is superimposed on the meaning to wrap it up so that it then requires interpretation (as do runes). The analogy with runes as a secret writing appears more than once (3/6–7, cf. note; 3/9; cf. 5/27, 109/15; cf. also Háttatal 1/43). Both runes and the art of poetry were given to men by Óðinn (and Bragi was another god who was a patron of poetry), but only as a skill or technology, not as religious inspiration. Such evaluative comments as Snorri includes suggest that he adhered to the classical idea of moderation in the use of figures of speech (cf. his references to nykrat, Háttatal 6/15–16 and nýgervingar, Skáldskapamál 41/16–17).

If the space devoted to analysis of diction in Skáldskaparmál is relatively small, the comments on the content or subject matter of poetry are even more sparse. There are, for instance, a number of interesting verses quoted which use sexual imagery to describe rulers gaining control over territory (see note to verse 10), but Snorri makes no remark about this or any other aspect of the imagery of skaldic verse except that on the use of names of giants and elves as base-words (40/15–16).

The intellectual background to Skáldskaparmál thus seems to be the same as that for the Grammatical Treatises; it is a scholarly and didactic milieu, concerned with the techniques of poetical expression. Both the author and the audience must have been fully literate, and there is little reason to connect the work with oral tradition of any kind.

Purpose

Most Icelandic prose writings have no statement of the purpose or origin of the work. Some fornaldarsögur and Romance sagas have a preface or epilogue where the author (or translator) says something about his intention, and learned writings like Íslendingabók and the Grammatical Treatises have prefaces. Snorri's Edda has a prologue, but this is mainly a narrative introduction to Gylfaginning and says nothing about the author's purpose. He discusses his historical methods in the Prologues to Heimskringla and Óláfs saga helga. But the purpose of Skáldskaparmál is, unusually, stated clearly at 5/25–35 between the first few narratives and the exemplification of the use of kennings in skaldic verse. It interrupts the dialogue in which both narratives and analysis are otherwise contained, and appears to be in an authorial voice. This purpose is clearly didactic, that is, the work was intended for use in training young poets, whether or not there was any formal organisation of that training in Iceland in the thirteenth century. It seems likely that there was not, and there is little indication that the work was actually intended for practical teaching purposes (i. e. as a basis for lectures). But though there is not much evidence for formal training of poets in vernacular verse, the teaching of (presumably) Latin verse composition is said to have taken place at the cathedral school at Hólar (Jóns saga helga ch. 8, ÍF XV2 217 and note 2). It was taught orally as part of the normal curriculum in schools throughout Europe in the Middle Ages after the elementary study of Latin, and there may have been places in Iceland where study of vernacular verse composition was introduced on the same plan, perhaps with the intention of replacing Latin as a didactic medium. The arrangement of Háttatal in U seems adapted for such use, as notes for an oral presentation, and may be modelled on the procedures for teaching Latin verse in schools; but in general it seems likely that Skáldskaparmál would be used for private study rather than for formal teaching, and one may speculate that it was in fact more and more used as an aid to the understanding of the poetry of the past rather than as a guide for actual composition, though fourteenth-century references (see Foote 1982, 114–15; 1984b, 257; Faulkes 1977, 34) suggest that (literate) poets did use it as a textbook. (On the purpose of Snorri's Edda and the Grammatical Treatises, especially that of the individual manuscript compilations that contain them, see Sverrir Tómasson 1993, where it is argued that the compiler of W, in particular, was a clerical educator concerned to preserve traditional kinds of native learning.)

Icelandic writers do not distinguish the genres of skaldic and eddic verse as modern scholars do. Snorri includes the metres characteristic of eddic verse alongside skaldic metres in Háttatal without distinguishing the two, and quotes both eddic and skaldic verse in Skáldskaparmál (though predominantly the latter). He does not quote skaldic verse within the dialogue of Gylfaginning, probably because he was aware that the setting of his dialogue was in a time long before the earliest known skaldic poets, so he probably did make a distinction between anonymous poetry believed to be from prehistoric times and poetry attributed to named poets who lived in the Viking Age or later. Skáldskaparmál is chiefly concerned with the complex diction we now associate most with skaldic verse, with a high proportion of kennings and heiti (poetical words), though these are not confined to what is now classed as skaldic verse; but some of the comments indicate that Snorri was most concerned with praise poetry (see particularly 67/28–9), and if he really was trying to revive the art of skaldic poetry, it seems to have been mostly as a vehicle for praise of kings and earls (whether alive or recently dead) that he valued it, and most of the poetry he himself is known for is of that kind. He acknowledges the existence of other kinds of verse—such as satirical verse, verse in praise of women, God (and heathen gods) and saints, mythological and devotional poems and occasional verse of various sorts—but most of his discussion centres on court poetry.

The kennings and heiti that are listed in Skáldskaparmál, and the narratives that explain their origins, apart from those that concern poetry itself, mostly relate to ways of referring to people; mostly men, but also women and including gods and goddesses, Christ and other kings. There are also terms listed for parts of the human body and emotions and other mental attributes, and the long section on gold seems to be there because gold appears so often in kennings for men, particularly kings (as givers of gold; cf. note to 74/3-6). Many of the other items included, such as ships, the sea, land, weapons and armour, battle, wolves and carrion birds, are most often found as parts of kennings for men, or else in statements about men. Many kennings for the sky are parts of kennings for God in Christian poems. There are a few other miscellaneous items, such as times and seasons and weather, and domestic animals, but the list of contents can hardly be said to cover all the concepts that a poet might wish to describe or refer to. The bulur have a somewhat wider range, and include, for instance, giants and troll-wives, rivers, fish and other animals. It seems reasonable to conclude that in Skáldskaparmál Snorri was mainly concerned with the appropriate poetical language to use in poems of praise about people, particularly kings and noblemen.

Manuscripts

As in other parts of the Edda, in Skáldskaparmál R and T have very similar texts and contain virtually the same material in the same order (each has only minor and apparently accidental omissions). C, which is fragmentary, contains the parts corresponding to 48/14 to 70/20 (50/17–21 is inserted at 48/31 and 50/22–9 is omitted; 60/18– 61/10 is inserted at 60/9) and after a lacuna of three leaves 83/21 to the end of the bulur (p. 133; Vafþrúðnismál 47/4-6 is added as an example of regin = gods at 85/2, cf. Gylfaginning 54). The text is very similar to that in R (there is no sign that it ever included Háttatal, or indeed Gylfaginning, though there is no reason to think that Skáldskaparmál was not once complete). It lacks verses 183-4 and the text of Grottasongr in ch. 43, which is probably an interpolation in R and T, so that here C may have a more original text than either of those two (it quotes the first verse only at 52/14). W has a text similar to these three as far as the end of the section on kennings (83/12), except that some narrative passages are missing (45/3– 58/3; this manuscript thus also does not include Grottasongr). Then, instead of the second half of Skáldskaparmál (but after Háttatal as the volume is now bound), there are the remains of what was evidently an extensively revised and interpolated version of the section on ókend heiti (chs 54-74); fragments survive of the parts concerned with names for man, corresponding to chs 65-7 (in ch. 65 there are rather a lot of agreements between W and U), and parts of the body (ch. 69); a short passage is included reminiscent of Háttatal 4/21-6/21 and some material is repeated from the earlier part of Skáldskaparmál (ch. 31). The poem Rígsbula, probably one of Snorri's sources, which is found on a separate leaf in W, may have been included in connection with the terms for men and women (although the word edda appears as a term for great-grandmother both in the prose lists and in the poem, no connection is indicated with the name of the book), but there is no sign that the bulur (ch. 75) were ever included. There is, however, an additional half-verse attributed to Úlfr Uggason (from Húsdrápa; SnE 1848–87, II 499; SnE 1924, 112). Seventeenth-century versions of Skáldskaparmál contain what seem to be further parts of this redaction, but neither these nor what survives in W are close enough to R to provide much help in reconstructing Snorri's original (see Faulkes 1977-9, especially I 158-9; on the dates of the manuscripts with independent textual value see Faulkes 2005, xxviii-xxx).

In U, A and B Skáldskaparmál appears in versions that differ considerably from RTCW both in content and in the order of material. In U the opening frame story and the first set of narratives (1/2–5/8) appear in very abbreviated form. Corresponding to 5/9–35

U has the first account of the rhetorical categories of poetry not only in a shorter form than RTW, but also different in that the third category of fornofn (5/18) is lacking and the exemplification of kennings is also quite different (though the examples given are of kennings for Óðinn, the first sentence describing the kenning is reminiscent of ch. 31). 5/32-6/29 (which includes all the references to the Trojan War and the allegorical explanation of mythology associated with it) is entirely lacking. There follow instead more of the narratives that in the other manuscripts come after the treatment of kennings for names of Æsir (chs 17-18), but omitting the extended quotations of Haustlong and Pórsdrápa (though the names and authorship of these two poems are quoted, see p. xlii below); and another fragment of ljóðaháttr that is absent in RTW is included in connection with Pórr's visit to Geirrøðargarðar (25/27 n.). At this point U includes four folios with some material that is clearly not part of Skáldskaparmál: Skáldatal, a genealogy of the Sturlung family and a list of lawspeakers ending with Snorri Sturluson's name. On the last of these pages, originally blank, has been added the illustration of the frame of Gylfaginning (reproduced in Faulkes 1987, 6). Then, after the heading Hér hefr Skáldskapar mál ok heiti margra hluta, comes a passage similar to 11/25-9, the beginning of ch. 3, but shorter and different in wording, and unaccompanied by any verse quotations (the passage is in fact compiled from 4/1-5 and 5/7-8, already included in shortened form at the end of chs G57 and G58), then ch. 2, and ch. 3 again, this time corresponding more closely to the content of this chapter in RTW. Then follow chs 4-16 (with various rewordings and omissions, including that of the final verse quotation of ch. 16), 19-20 (21 is omitted), 22 (omitting the extended quotation from Haustlong), 23–32 (ch. 33 is omitted), ch. 36, then chs 37–8. In place of chs 39–44 at this point there is a just a brief list of the kennings derived from the stories narrated in these chapters (compiled from [45/3,] 46/6, 47/21, 48/30, 49/5, 59/32) and the verses quoted in chs 44 (verses 185, 186/5-8) and 45. Then come chs 46–49 (omitting verses 248–9), part of the first sentence of ch. 50 and 73/31-74/6 (i. e. omitting at this point both the story of Hjaðningavíg and the verses from Ragnarsdrápa, verses 250–54), chs 51-56, omitting here 85/19-22, but including here the beginning of ch. 23 (33/24-7) again, this time in a shortened and altered form. Ch. 57 is entirely missing, and ch. 63 follows (omitting the second half, 99/15-20) before the end of ch. 56 (85/21-2, 19-20, in that order) with the first two lines of ch. 26 added again. After a half page originally left blank, though now filled with a drawing, there comes next the second part of ch. 64, from 101/10 (the first part of this chapter is not included, and nor is verse 411), then chs 65-74 (ending at 109/15). U does not include ch. 75, the bulur, though two verses containing terms for woman are included at the end of Skáldskaparmál (SnE 1848-87, II 363; see below). After ch. 74 come various chapters omitted earlier: ch. 58 (omitting 90/1-3, 13-15 and with 88/6-8 after 88/18; ch. 59 is omitted); ch. 60 (ch. 61 is omitted); ch. 62; ch. 50 (the story of Hjaðningavíg omitting the verses from Ragnarsdrápa and repeating 72/1–2, but omitting 73/31–74/6, which was included earlier); chs 34-6 (ch. 36 is thus included twice in this manuscript, but the second time with a fuller introduction); ch. 39 (the beginning of the story of Otrgjold, omitting the first 10 words (see above)); the story breaks off soon after the beginning of ch. 40 (46/20) with a brief summary of the first paragraph; the remainder of the chapter and chs 41-42 are omitted (so that the quotations from Ragnarsdrápa at the end of ch. 42 are also absent from U); ch. 44 (repeating the verses at the end of the chapter, this time without the omission of verse 186/1-4, though the four lines are written as a separate verse from 186/5–8); a summary of ch. 43 (omitting Grottasongr as well as verses 183–4); ch. 45 (without verses 187 and 188-90, the stanzas from Bjarkamál, which were included earlier, in their proper place just before ch. 46). This manuscript then concludes Skáldskaparmál with three stanzas (terms for woman, Skj A I 652, verses 2a and b; a mansongsvísa, Skj A I 601, verse 36) which were perhaps written over an erasure (see the facsimile edition of U, II 168; SnE 1848-87, II 363 n. 2). The first two of these verses are also in A among the bulur (they are similar to some of Einarr Skúlason's verses). After this U has a version of The Second Grammatical Treatise and parts of Háttatal.

In many of these chapters verses are missing and in ch. 62 some are quoted by their first line only. This suggests that in the redactor's exemplar they may have been complete; compare the treatment of Háttatal in this manuscript (see Faulkes 1999, xxv): quoting just the first lines of verses suggests that the manuscript was used as an aide-mémoire for a reciter or lecturer. But the most significant omissions are the extended quotations from Haustlong, Pórsdrápa,

Ragnarsdrápa and the bulur. This has been taken to strengthen the case for these poems being interpolations into Snorri's text, though the fact that even in U the first two of these, and the names of their authors, are referred to, and lists of names that seem to be derived from bulur are included (e. g. those of stags, SnE 1848–87, II 350, though the name eikbyrnir (see verse 512) seems to have been added here by a later hand) shows that the text in U is not independent of these sources. Similarly, though nearly all of chs 40–42 are omitted from U, the kennings derived from the story were listed earlier (after ch. 38), so it is clear that the redactor knew these chapters. The treatment of ch. 3 in U is the best evidence that U is in fact a shortening and adaptation of Skáldskaparmál in a form more like the other manuscripts, since though the beginning of the chapter first appears in abbreviated and altered form, like many other chapters in this manuscript, the scribe copied the chapter out again in a form closer to that of the other manuscripts and clearly did not lack a complete text in his exemplar; cf. his treatment of the last sentences of chs 657-8. The inclusion of the beginning of ch. 23 twice, the second time in shortened and altered form, again implies that the variations and shortening in U are not always due to a faulty exemplar. Otherwise the interesting thing about the different order of material in U is the tendency for narratives to be separated from the enumeration of the kennings they exemplify and the several cases of kennings and heiti being listed together instead of separated as they more often are in RTC (though even in these manuscripts there is not complete consistency in this). It cannot be said that the arrangement in U is either more logical or more consistent, but it is possible that in some respects U retains an earlier ordering of material than the other manuscripts, though this does not have to be because the order in the other manuscripts has been altered by a hand later than Snorri's. There is a good deal that points to U having been derived from a draft of Snorri's work in which the material was arranged in random order, perhaps on loose pieces of parchment, and the other manuscripts may derive from a revision made by Snorri himself (cf. pp. xi-xii above). But since some of the passages in U that have been shortened appear elsewhere in the manuscript in fuller and more accurate form, not all the omissions can have been in the redactor's exemplar, and the repetitions of material in U, where one version of a passage is fuller and more accurate than another, imply that the redactor was neither working from a rough draft nor from a damaged exemplar, but that he included material in shortened form (whether he did the shortening himself or found it in Snorri's draft) as well as in its completer form, because of a change in plan either by himself or by Snorri. In many respects even the texts of R and T seem illogically ordered and it is likely, as said before, that Snorri had not finished working on the material at the time of his death, and he may have left more than one draft of it. U is however inaccurately copied as well, and in many cases the shortening of passages has left them incoherent, and the verses too are poorly copied. This shows that many of the characteristic readings of this manuscript are the result of careless work by a copyist or redactor.

A is a fragmentary manuscript, though the part containing extracts from Skáldskaparmál does not actually have any pages missing. The extracts begin with ch. 45 (with only the heading Frá Holga konungi) and continue to the end of ch. 49 (verse 198 is placed after verse 199) but include only the first part of the first sentence and the last few lines of ch. 50 (73/31-74/6, thus omitting the quotation from Ragnarsdrápa; this is similar to the corresponding part of U). Then follow chs 51-52 and the beginning of ch. 53, as far as verse 278, of which only the first word is written, followed by leita capitula fyrr í bókinni (probably a reference to verse 5 in ch. 2, showing that the scribe or redactor had access to the earlier part of Skáldskaparmál), and the beginning (line 1 only) of verse 292 with its introduction (82/1-2) from later in the chapter. Then follow chs 54 (the first in the ókend heiti section of Skáldskaparmál; verse 300a is omitted) and 55 (ch. 56 is lacking), ch. 57, then chs 61 (verse 350 comes after verse 351; verse 357 is complete with 8 lines) and 62, ch. 58 as far as 88/18, but omitting 88/6–8, then ch. 60, then the remaining parts of ch. 58: 90/10-12 (with a list of additional names), 90/13-15, 88/19-90/2 (88/6-8 and 90/3-9 still omitted; two extra lines in verse 330). Then come chs 59, 56, 63. Of ch. 64, there is included only the second sentence (followed by leita fyrr í bókinni alt til þess er Stúfr kvað) and 102/16-105/16. Instead of verse 398 a different verse attributed to Markús is included, Skj A I 452, no. 2 (see note to verse 270), and there are two additional lines in verse 400 and two omitted in verse 403. After the first line of verse 411 is written ok fyrr er ritat, which is a reference to verse 386, not included earlier in this manuscript. Then there are chs 65-75, concluding with a greatly extended series of pulur (cf. note to verses 412–517). These include some verses in dróttkvætt with names for women and islands, an example of a word for heart in a verse of Illugi Bryndælaskáld (Skj A I 384), and four lines from Hallfrøðr's Óláfsdrápa (erfidrápa) (Skj A I 160), a prose list of names associated with Hel (cf. Gylf. 27/18–21) and a glossary of poetical words and two lines in Latin about euphonia (see SnE III lxxii). The manuscript concludes with the incomplete (but only extant) text of Haukr Valdísarson's Íslendingadrápa (Skj A I 556–60).

Though there are some similarities between this manuscript and U, both in the arrangement of material and in some of the readings, the two manuscripts do not seem to be very closely related and cannot be said to contain the same redaction. The explanation of this text may be the same as that proposed for U, however, that it is derived from a draft of the work on loose sheets, since the order of material in general seems rather random. Though much is omitted, the references to earlier parts of the work that are not included show that the redactor was working from a version much more complete than that which he wrote out. There is variation in the order of some of the verse quotations within chapters, and some verses are more complete. The verses are in general better copied than in U, and contain some interesting additions to those quoted in R. It is difficult to say how much of the additional material and reorganisation dates from after Snorri's time.

B has an arrangement of parts of Skáldskaparmál that is similar in various ways to that in A, and these two manuscripts are clearly closely related, though B includes between chs 46 and 47 some of the earlier parts of Skáldskaparmál that are not in A. As in A, the text of Skáldskaparmál in B begins with chs 45–6 of Skáldskaparmál (with the heading Kenningar gulls), and then it has chs 2 (omitting some verse quotations), 3, 4–16 (omitting all the verse quotations); chs 19–22 (omitting 30/21–2 and the extended quotation from Haustlong; 30/15–16 placed after 33/23); chs 23–31; then a version of ch. 1 (introduced with the words Svá segir í bók þeirri sem Edda heitir at sá maðr sem Ægir hét spurði Braga skáld meðal annarra hluta . . . ; cf. Bragi (1) in Index), which like that in U omits all reference to Troy and the allegorical explanation of myths as based on the Troy story (5/33–6/29), though it adds a reference to fyrsta capitula greindrar bókar þar sem segir af skipan himins ok jarðar ok allra hluta er beim fylgja etc., which seems to refer to the Prologue to Gylfaginning. Then follow chs 32 and 47 (where verse 198 is replaced by verse 192 from ch. 46, already included earlier). There is a lacuna of probably one leaf beginning at the point corresponding to 62/29, and the next extant leaf begins in ch. 61 (95/1; verse 357 is here complete as in A) and the text continues to the end of ch. 62. The text of the missing leaf may have included some of the same parts of the text as A has between chs 47 and 61, though this section of the text covers 6 pages in A. The pages of B contain almost twice as much text as those of A, but still it is doubful whether there would have been enough room on one leaf for all the text that is missing. Then come chs 58 (as far as 88/18 and omitting 88/6–8 and the first five words of 88/9), 64 (from 101/10; the same substitution for verse 398 as A, and like A having two additional lines in verse 400 and two omitted in verse 403, but omitting verse 411 entirely; verse 486 is included later with the first half of this chapter), 60, 64 (omitting the first five words; cf. A) as far as 101/9; and finally chs 65-75; the bulur appear in a similar extended redaction to that in A, though the last part is lost where one or more further leaves are missing.

As with A and U, there seems to be no clear reason for the differences in the ordering of the material in B; there is the same tendency to omit extended narratives and quotations from the mythological skaldic poems in the chapters it includes where R has them. Though it is difficult to read because of deterioration of the parchment, the text, like that in A, often contains readings (for instance in the verses) that are better than those in R, and has a number of additional lines of verse. The redaction is not just a series of extracts; it represents a collection of material which is sometimes fuller than that in RTW. The best explanation of it is that like A and perhaps U it was based on a draft of material on loose sheets of parchment copied out without much conscious attempt at ordering it, though one might argue that some of the rearrangement of items has resulted in a more logical ordering of material, especially in chs 54–63; see table below.

All these manuscripts contain items that were probably not intended to be part of Snorri's Edda. Besides the additional items at the end of A that are not in R (which may also have been on the second lost leaf of B), there are some that are related to Snorri's Edda in various ways earlier in the manuscript. Before the text of Skáldskaparmál both A and B have parts of The Third Grammatical Treatise which is by Snorri's nephew Óláfr hvítaskáld (A has before this a fragment of a fifth treatise that is not found elsewhere) and then a collection of kennings for various concepts without much apparent organisation (printed in SnE 1931, 255-9). In A this is prefaced (in red) by 'Hér er lykt beim hlut bókar er Óláfr Þórðarson hefir samansett ok upphefr Skáldskaparmál ok kenningar eptir því sem fyrirfundit var í kvæðum hofuðskálda ok Snorri hefir síðan samanfæra látit' (in B by 'Hér byrjask kenningar skáldskapar'). It is unlikely that this collection is actually part of Snorri's work, though it could be part of the material he had collected for Skáldskaparmál or it could be a draft; the material in it does not, however, seem to be used in Skáldskaparmál, at any rate not systematically, and it may be just a collection made by someone else to supplement Snorri's work (cf. p. xiv above). Two verses from Grímnismál (40-41) are quoted near the end of the passage, and it is followed in both A and B by a short passage about the wolf Fenrir which is related to Gylfaginning ch. 34 but includes some verse lines describing the fetter Gleipnir that are not in Gylfaginning (cf. the names associated with Hel towards the end of A, which are related to the same chapter of Gylfaginning). Both A and B include some poems: A has a fragment of a collection of eddic poems similar to that in the Codex Regius, though the six leaves (fols 1-6) that contain them need not have been part of the same book as the rest of A originally; they have now been separated and remain in Copenhagen as AM 748 I a 4to, while the rest has been transferred to Reykjavík as AM 748 I b 4to. At the end A has a glossary of poetical words and Haukr Valdísarson's Íslendingadrápa, and B a collection of Christian religious poems, some of them probably composed in the fourteenth century. C has at the end (in a different hand) a genealogy of Snorri's family, the Sturlungs, from Adam down to about the end of the fourteenth century. U has (in the middle of the text of Skáldskaparmál, after ch. 18) Skáldatal, a genealogy of the Sturlung family and a list of lawspeakers (as well as the well-known drawing of Gangleri and the three kings that illustrates the frame of Gylfaginning), and between Skáldskaparmál and Háttatal a version of The Second Grammatical Treatise. R and T contain Grottasqugr, R also has Jómsvíkingadrápa and Málsháttakvæði (at the end). W contains Rígspula with a revised version of the second part of Skáldskaparmál as well as the four Grammatical Treatises.

Since the Prose Edda is a treatise on poetry, it is not surprising that manuscripts of it should also contain poems of various kinds, whether or not these were poems collected by Snorri either in connection with the compilation of his Edda or for other reasons. Snorri's Edda may well have been a stimulus to the collection and copying of poems both eddic and other in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. Skáldskaparmál clearly also belongs in the series of treatises about language and rhetoric with the so-called Grammatical Treatises (it may be noted that just as Ari's Íslendingabók sets the pattern for the later sagas by including a piece of skaldic verse in the narrative, so The First Grammatical Treatise provides a model for Skáldskaparmál by quoting Icelandic poetry to illustrate a linguistic point (FGT 1972, 226, cf. 84). The other items (genealogies, lists of poets and lawspeakers) associate various redactions of Skáldskaparmál particularly with Snorri Sturluson and his family. It is clear that the Prose Edda, and Skáldskaparmál in particular, was in a continual process of revision and expansion, and it is likely that this process began with Snorri himself, so that some redactions, such as that in U and maybe those in A and B, could be based on drafts he made himself (or had someone make). Some of the additional material in these manuscripts dates from after Snorri's death (some of the poems appended to B, The Third and The Fourth Grammatical Treatise) and W (in its redaction of the second part of Skáldskaparmál, SnE 1924, 112) contains verse probably composed in the fourteenth century, that ascribed to 'bróðir Árni (Jónsson?)', c.1370 (Skj A II 430; cf. Finnur Jónsson 1920–24, III 14–15). Thus the process of expansion clearly went on after Snorri's death. It continued after the Renaissance with adaptations like Magnús Ólafsson's Edda (the so-called Laufás Edda) on into the eighteenth century (Hraundals Edda etc.; see Faulkes 1977–9).

The compilers of the extant manuscripts that contain Snorri's Edda were clearly interested in material that concerned poetical technique, particularly rhetoric, and the contents of the manuscripts illustrate this, though attitudes to the material may differ from one compiler to another. It may well be, for instance, that the compiler of W was principally interested in traditional vernacular poetry as a medium for religious teaching (cf. Sverrir Tómasson 1993), while the compiler of U may have been more interested in the prose narratives (he seems not to have understood much of the verses).

This edition

Parts at least of Skáldskaparmál appear in all seven of the manuscripts of the Prose Edda that have independent textual value. On the dates and relationships of these manuscripts see Faulkes 2005, xxviii-xxxi. It is assumed that R, which has the fullest text of any of the medieval manuscripts, represents the contents and arrangement of the Prose Edda in the form nearest to that in which Snorri left it; the second part of Skáldskaparmál in W is clearly a later redaction of the material, and U is verbally shortened and carelessly copied to the point of incomprehensibility in many places. So even though additions and other changes may have been made to Snorri's text in R too, it has usually been the manuscript on which the text of editions of the work have been based. Where there are gaps in the text, and where it is clearly corrupt and incomprehensible, it is filled out, mainly from T and W. Emended words in the text are marked with an asterisk; where a word that is in R is omitted from the text or the order of words is changed, † is printed. Words or letters accidentally omitted by the scribe are included in angle brackets <>, illegible words or letters are supplied in square brackets [] (some words are now illegible in R or have disappeared which are visible either in the facsimile edition or in the photographs that were made before the most recent restoration of the manuscript, and brackets are not normally used for these; sometimes, too, words seem to have been visible to Finnur Jónsson that are now unclear or illegible, and these are often accepted as certain). The textual notes list all the places where the readings of R have been departed from, giving the original readings and the source of the emendation in the same normalised form as the rest of the text (where it is necessary to give the spelling of the manuscript, it is put in inverted commas; readings from manuscripts other than R are quoted either from the facsimile editions or from photographs, though where they are unclear, readings from SnE 1848–87 and 1924 have sometimes been accepted). A few of the more interesting and significant variants in other manuscripts, in particular some of the additional lines of verse, are included in the General Notes.

The glossary attempts to explain all words in the verses and all those words in the prose that are likely to cause difficulty or are not adequately glossed in the edition of Gylfaginning (Faulkes 1982). Inflected forms are added to the headword in brackets where they may cause problems. The translations of many of the names in the bulur, especially those of animal species, are little more than guesses, but explanations of a lot of the names are given in ÁBM, and the information there is not normally repeated here (on names in the bulur see also Bugge 1875; there is a useful guide to modern Icelandic animal and plant-names in Óskar Ingimarsson 1989). In the explanations of the verses in the Glossary and notes, the attempt has been made as far as possible to avoid emendation of the text of R, i. e. to interpret the text in this version rather than to attempt to restore supposed archetypal readings even when the texts of verses are preserved in other works. The most likely meanings of words and their syntax are given in the Glossary, where explanations are also given of all the kennings; some other possible interpretations are indicated in the notes, using some of K. Reichardt's suggestions (1928, 1948, 1969) and occasionally those of D. Davidson (DD) and others. It was not thought necessary also to give the verses in 'prose word order'. The basis is the interpretations of Finnur Jónsson in Skj B and LP, but particular attention is paid to those of Magnús Finnbogason (SnE 1952). Frequent use has also been made of the comments of E. A. Kock (in NN), who has often tried to simplify Finnur Jónsson's syntactical interpretations, which can be unnecessarily complicated. But since poets sometimes did use complex structures (e.g. tmesis) it is not clear that one should always be looking for the simplest interpretation. There are good discussions of the problem in Reichardt 1928 (especially pp. 1-17) and 1969, where the author studies 24 supposed examples of tmesis in single dróttkvætt lines and finds that only 9 of them are clear examples, 12 of them being easily got rid of by making the first element genitive by adding -s. Kock also proposes that a number of words should be taken as descriptive genitives instead of as determinants of kennings, and these too are difficult to be certain of. Another problematical kind of interpretation requires words to be taken as adverbial dative singular when they do not have a distinctive ending, e. g. hjarta v49/2, hoð v252/4; kind in v297/3 is apparently dat. of advantage; there is no grammatical reason why this should not be so, but it seems best avoided if possible. It is the same with prepositions separated from their object. There are some fairly clear examples (v65/3, v79/7, v85/7-8 (see note), v134/1, v146/1, v260/3, v315/1, v363/1 (cf. NN 785), v401/2) but others are less certain (v85/1, 250/2, 290/3; see notes) and it is difficult to imagine oral poets using such a confusing procedure unnecessarily. The same may be said of the phenomenon of the transference of determinants or interchange of elements in kennings, often involving a kind of tmesis, though again there are some clear examples: v39/4, v89/6, v90/3–4, v91/5–6, v95/5, v103/6, v133/6 (?—see note), v140/4, v149/3 (?), v150/2, v192/2 (?), v246/1, v322/3, v333/8; v73/6 according to DD; see Glossary under þing, herþruma, myrkaurriði, myrkdreki. Snorri himself uses this feature in Háttatal 28/1, while the commentary to verse 255 of Skáldskaparmál suggests such an interpretation when it is clearly unnecessary. When there are two possible interpretations of the same words which both give acceptable meanings, it seems natural to take the simpler one, except that it is not certain that simplicity was what most poets were aiming at; but it is hard to believe that their original audience would not have understood their verse in the most obvious way (cf. Faulkes 1997).

The normalisation follows the same pattern as in Gylfaginning and Háttatal, both in the prose and verse passages, where the language of the thirteenth century is largely what is being represented. The spelling only has been normalised; variant word-forms (such as 3rd pers. sg. vil at 1/36, for instance) are retained where they occur. Accents are not used in most foreign names, nor in other words where the original quantity of the vowel is uncertain (e. g. in the name Viðarr, even though in some occurrences in verse the long vowel is required). The following spellings may be noted.

In R, $v\acute{e}r$ and $v\acute{e}l$ are frequently spelt v&r, v&l. Often ey seems to be written for ϕ or α , e. g. in αgir v48/3, n&li- v71/4, $-\alpha ra < n > v100/2$, n&li- v340/3, n&li- v364/3; cf. Óðreyrir in Index; conversely ℓ in ℓ - in ℓ - in ℓ - in Index; conversely ℓ - in ℓ - in ℓ - in ℓ - in Index; conversely ℓ - in ℓ - in ℓ - in ℓ - in Index; conversely ℓ - in ℓ - in ℓ - in ℓ - in Index; conversely ℓ - in ℓ - in ℓ - in Index; conversely ℓ - in ℓ - in Index; conversely ℓ - in ℓ - in Index; conversely ℓ - in Index; v376/1; thus 'leyra' 106/12 may be for ℓ - in ℓ - in ℓ - in ℓ - in ℓ - in Index; conversely ℓ - in ℓ - in Index; in Index in Index in Index in ℓ - i

Among the departures from normal spelling that may be phonological rather than orthographical is the frequent disappearance of d between consonants (before or after n), e. g. in munnlaug v110/4; annvanar v156/4; ranngríð v449/6; vinnbjartr v454/4; munngjallr v458/1 (cf. Glossary and note v130/1 t. n.). Conversely, 'Stnyrti-' is written for *Snyrti-*106/18; and 'fyrst-' is written for fýst- v74/3, 'hvrs-' for hús- v444/4.

The manuscript is inconsistent in the distribution of $\delta/d/t$: $li\delta$ is spelled 'lit' v171/8; muntu is spelled 'mvndv' v263/1; ritat spelled 'rita\delta' 78/22 (if it is not ritu\delta that is intended; cf. note).

Some consonants are doubled without reason, and in some cases they are written single where doubling would be normal: the manuscript has '-hattar' v83/2; 'varar' v131/2; 'pruttinn' v145/3; 'ætti' v151/8; 'halr' v168/4; 'skaptre' v181/5; 'Rǫkkr' v213/1 (cf. Noreen 1923, § 279.2); 'ifrravðvll' 85/20; 'næRi' (rhyming with mæringr) v388/4; 'skattvrnir' v516/19. Some contracted forms of words are used where the metre presupposes uncontracted forms, e. g. brá for bráa; see note to verse 143 and á (2) in Glossary.

Abbreviations are sometimes inconsistently used: 'kall' with abbreviation mark for $k\varrho llu\partial u$ 5/38, 'ml' with abbreviation sign (i. e. $m\varkappa lir$) for what surely should be $m\varkappa lit$ 52/9 (usually this scribe writes 'mæl' with a curl on the l for $m\varkappa lir$ (2/28, 38, 3/9, 10), 'mæli' with a curl for $m\varkappa lit$ (48/19, 59/14); apparently 'm^{ti}' at 1/24); 'svan' with sign for -us for svans v147/6; -r with abbreviation for -r 9/28 (see t. n.) and v316/4 (similarly in the heading in U, SnE 1848–87, II 295, where hefr seems to be written 'hefir'; see 1/1–2 t. n. and Hreinn Benediktsson 1965, 92); also unusual are 'svþō' for súðum v367/1 (perhaps an alteration) and 'sin' for sínum v250/2, 'son' for sonum v280/2.

Punctuation is editorial (including round brackets), but note is taken of the capitalisation of the manuscript in the arrangement of paragraphs. Verses have been arranged in lines and divided in accordance with what seem the scribe's intentions. Stanza divisions in the pulur are marked only by capital letters in R and are in some cases unclear, while divisions between pulur are generally indicated by larger ornamental capitals (they are marked in this edition by horizontal lines at the end of each pula).

In the margins the chapter numbers of SnE 1848–87 I are given (as in SnE 1931 in brackets in the text); the first four ('Bragaræður') are there numbered 55–8 (here 655 etc.) in continuation from Gylfaginning, and in that edition Skáldskaparmál was taken to begin at 5/9.

Table of verse quotations and their preservation

+ before a source means that further verses or lines from the same poem (or in the case of lausavisur, further verses by the same poet) appear in the source indicated. Without this sign the source indicated includes one or more of the verses of the poem quoted in $Sk\acute{a}ldskaparm\acute{a}l$. When the sign follows the source, it indicates that one or more of the verses and also further verses (or lines) from the same poem appear there. KS = Kings' Sagas (i. e. two or more of Fagrskinna, Morkinskinna, Hulda-Hrokkinskinna, Heimskringla, $\acute{O}TM$, $\acute{O}H$ etc.). $EM\acute{O}=Edda$ $Magn\'{u}sar$ $\acute{O}lafssonar$. More specific references to sources of the verse quotations are to be found in the General Notes.

* means that the verse is only found in Snorri's Edda. Square brackets indicate a second quotation of the same verse. A question mark before a verse number means that it is doubtful whether the verse belongs in the poem it is attributed to.

GLOSSARY OF TECHNICAL TERMS

- aðalhending: the chief hending in a couplet, full (internal) rhyme, where two syllables have the same vowel and following consonant or consonant group.
- drápa (pl. drápur): a formally constructed poem (expected to have a stef or refrains).
- dróttkvætt: a verse-form with stanzas of 8 six-syllable lines with regular alliteration and hendings (Háttatal verses 1–6).
- erfidrápa: a memorial poem, a drápa in praise of a dead person.
- flokkr: a poem consisting of a series of stanzas without refrain (stef). forn minni: ancient tradition, inherited statement, proverb.
- fornaldarsaga: saga of ancient times, Heroic saga.
- fornyrðislag: a verse-form common in eddic poems as well as in skaldic verse, and similar to that of West Germanic poetry, having two-stress lines linked in pairs by alliteration.
- heiti: name, appellation, designation, term (usually, though not always, of a name which is not the usual one by which a person or thing is called; see Glossary).
- hending: rhyme, assonance (usually internal rhyme, but also used of end-rhyme).
- hrynhent: a verse-form similar to dróttkvætt but with lines of eight syllables (Háttatal 62–4).
- kenning: description, designation (usually a periphrastic one).
- klofastef: a refrain in the form of two or more continuous lines of verse separated from each other and distributed individually among two or more stanzas (usually appearing as the last lines of these stanzas, and unrelated syntactically to the rest of them); see Háttatal, note to 70/12–16.
- kviðuháttr: a verse-form with alternating lines of three and four syllables (Háttatal 102).
- lausavísa (pl. -vísur), laus vísa: a separate strophe not part of a sequence or long poem.
- liðhent, liðhendur: a verse-form with rhyme and alliteration falling on the same syllables, and/or with assonance between the first (rhyming) syllable of the even line and the hendings of the preceding odd line (Háttatal 41 and 53).
- ljóðaháttr: 'song-form', a verse form in which two alliterating short lines are followed by one longer line with independent internal alliteration.

málaháttr: a verse-form with lines having an extra syllable compared with fornyrðislag (Háttatal 95).

mansongr: a love poem, or a passage of love poetry in a narrative poem. Mansongsvísa is a verse from such a passage, or a verse similar to those in a mansongr.

ofljóst: punning, word-play; often by substituting homonyms when one is a proper name, i. e. using a proper name or a kenning for it for the common noun equivalent.

ókend heiti: names, appellations, designations, terms without periphrasis, without qualifiers or attributives (determinants).

runhent: end-rhymed; see runhenda in Glossary to Háttatal.

skothending: (internal) half-rhyme, assonance (where two syllables end with the same consonant or consonant group but contain a different vowel).

stef: refrain, a stanza or line or series of lines that are repeated at intervals in (part of) a drápa; see Glossary to Háttatal.

tmesis: the separation of a word into two parts with another word or words between.

pula: a (versified) list of names or synonyms (heiti).

[SKÁLDSKAPARMÁL]

E[INN ma]ðr er nefndr Ægir eða Hlér. Hann bjó í ey þeiri er nú er kǫlluð [Hlé]sey. Hann var mjǫk fjǫlkunnigr. Hann gerði ferð sína til Ásgarðs, en er Æsir vissu ferð hans var honum fagnat vel ok þó margir hlutir með sjónhverfingum. Ok um kveldit er drekka skyldi, þá lét Óðinn bera inn í hǫllina sverð, ok váru svá bjǫrt at þar af lýsti, ok var ekki haft ljós annat meðan við drykkju var setit. Þá gengu Æsir at gildi sínu ok settusk í hásæti tólf Æsir, þeir er dómendr skyldu vera ok svá váru nefndir: Þórr, Njǫrðr, Freyr, Týr, Heimdallr, Bragi, Viðarr, Váli, Ullr, Hænir, Forseti, Loki; slíkt sama Ásynjur: Frigg, Freyja, Gefjun, Iðunn, Gerðr, Sigyn, Fulla, Nanna. Ægi þótti gǫfugligt þar um at sjásk. Veggþili ǫll váru þar tjǫlduð með fǫgrum skjǫldum. Þar var ok áfenginn mjǫðr ok mjǫk drukkit. Næsti maðr Ægi sat Bragi, ok áttusk þeir við drykkju ok orðaskipti. Sagði Bragi Ægi frá mǫrgum tíðindum þeim er Æsir hǫfðu átt.

Hann hóf þar frásogn at 'þrír Æsir fóru heiman, Óðinn ok Loki ok Hænir, ok fóru um fjoll ok eyðimerkr ok var ilt til matar. En er þeir koma ofan í dal nakkvarn, sjá þeir øxna flokk ok taka einn uxann ok snúa til seyðis. En er þeir hyggja at soðit mun vera, raufa þeir seyðinn ok var ekki soðit. Ok í annat sinn er þeir raufa seyðinn, þá er stund var liðin, ok var ekki soðit. Mæla þeir þá sín á milli hverju þetta mun gegna. Þá heyra þeir mál í eikina upp yfir sik at sá er þar sat kvazk ráða því er eigi soðnaði á seyðinum. Þeir litu til ok sat þar orn ok eigi lítill. Þá mælti orninn:

"Vilið þér gefa mér fylli mína af oxanum, þá mun soðna á seyðinum."

'Peir játa því. Pá lætr hann sígask ór trénu ok sezk á seyðinn ok leggr upp þegar it fyrsta lær oxans tvau ok báða bógana. Pá varð Loki reiðr ok greip upp mikla stǫng ok reiðir af ǫllu afli ok rekr á kroppinn erninum. Qrninn bregzk við hǫggit ok flýgr upp. Pá var fǫst stǫngin við kropp arnarins ok hendr Loka við annan enda. Qrninn flýgr hátt svá at fætr taka niðr grjótit ok urðir ok viðu, [en] hendr hans hyggr hann at slitna munu ór ǫxlum. Hann kallar ok biðr allþarfliga ǫrninn friðar, en hann segir at Loki skal aldri lauss verða nema hann veiti honum svardaga at koma Iðunni út of Ásgarð með epli sín, en Loki vil þat. Verðr hann þá lauss ok ferr til lagsmanna sinna ok er eigi at sinni sǫgð fleiri tíðindi um þeira ferð áðr þeir koma heim. En at ákveðinni stundu teygir Loki Iðunni út um Ásgarð í skóg nokkvorn ok segir at hann hefir fundit epli þau er henni munu gripir í þykkja, ok bað at hon skal hafa með sér sín epli ok bera saman ok hin. Þá kemr þar Þjazi jǫtunn í arnarham ok tekr Iðunni ok flýgr braut með ok í Þrymheim til bús síns.

'En Æsir urðu illa við hvarf Iðunnar ok gerðusk þeir brátt hárir ok gamlir. Þá áttu þeir Æsir þing ok [spyrr hverr annan] hvat síðarst vissi til Iðunnar, en þat var sét síðarst at hon gekk ór Ásgarði með Loka. Pá var Loki tekinn ok færðr á þingit ok var honum heitit bana eða píslum. En er hann varð hræddr þá kvazk hann mundu sæk<j>a eptir Iðunni í Jotunheima ef Freyja vill ljá honum valshams er hon á. Ok er hann fær valshaminn flýgr hann norðr í Jotunheima ok kemr einn dag til Þjaza jotuns. Var hann róinn á sæ, en Iðunn var ein heima. Brá Loki henni í hnotar líki ok hafði *í klóm sér ok flýgr sem mest. [E]n er Þjazi kom heim ok saknar Iðunnar, tekr hann arnarhaminn ok flýgr eptir Loka ok dró arnsúg í flugnum. En er Æsirnir sá er valrinn flaug með hnotina ok hvar ǫrninn flaug, þá gengu þeir út undir Ásgarð ok báru þannig byrðar af lokarspánum, ok þá er valrinn flaug inn of borgina, lét hann fallask niðr við borgarvegginn. Þá slógu Æsirnir eldi í lokarspánu en orninn mátti eigi stoðva er hann misti valsins. Laust þá eldinum í fiðri arnarins ok tók þá af fluginn. Þá váru Æsirnir nær ok drápu Þjaza jotun fyrir innan Ásgrindr ok er bat víg allfrægt.

'En Skaði, dóttir Þjaza jotuns, tók hjálm ok brynju ok oll hervápn ok ferr til Ásgarðs at hefna foður síns. En Æsir buðu henni sætt ok yfirbætr, ok hit fyrsta at hon skal kjósa sér mann af Ásum ok kjósa at fótum ok sjá ekki fleira af. Þá sá hon eins manns fætr forkunnar fagra ok mælir:

"Penna kýs ek, fátt mun ljótt á Baldri."

'En þat var Njorðr ór Nóatúnum. Þat hafði hon ok í sættargjorð sinni at Æsir skyldu þat gera er hon hugði at þeir skyldu eigi mega, at hlægja hana. Þá gerði Loki þat at hann batt um skegg geitar nokkvorrar ok oðrum enda um hreðjar sér ok létu þau ymsi eptir ok skrækti hvárttveggja við hátt. Þá lét Loki fallask í kné Skaða ok þá hló hon. Var þá gjor sætt af Ásanna hendi við hana.

'Svá er sagt at Óðinn gerði þat til yfirbóta við hana at hann tók augu Þjaza ok kastaði upp á himin ok gerði af stjornur tvær.'

Pá mælir Ægir: 'Mikill þykki mér Þjazi fyrir sér hafa verit, eða hvers kyns var hann?'

Bragi svarar: 'Olvaldi hét faðir hans, ok merki munu þér at þykkja ef ek segi þér frá honum. Hann var mjok gullauðigr, en er hann dó ok synir hans skyldu skipta arfi, þá hǫfðu þeir mæling at gullinu er þeir skiptu at hverr skyldi taka munnfylli sína ok allir jafnmargar. Einn beira var Þjazi, annarr Iði, þriði Gangr. En þat hofum vér orðtak nú með oss at kalla gullit munntal þessa jotna, en vér felum í rúnum eða í skáldskap svá at vér kollum þat mál eða orðta<k>, tal bessa jotna.'

Pá mælir Ægir: 'Pat þykki mér vera vel fólgit í rúnum.'

Ok enn mælir Ægir: 'Hvaðan af hefir hafizk sú íþrótt er þér kallið skáldskap?'

10 G57

Bragi svarar: 'Pat váru upphof til þess at guðin hofðu ósætt við þat fólk er Vanir heita, en þeir logðu með sér friðstefnu ok settu grið á þá lund at þeir gengu hvárirtveggju til eins kers ok spýttu í hráka *sínum. En at skilnaði þá tóku goðin ok vildu eigi láta týnask þat griðamark ok skopuðu þar ór mann. Sá heitir Kvasir. Hann er svá vitr at engi spyrr hann þeira hluta er eigi kann hann órlausn. Hann fór víða um heim at kenna monnum fræði, ok þá er hann kom at heimboði til dverga nokkvorra, Fjalars ok Galars, þá kolluðu þeir hann með sér á einmæli ok drápu hann, létu renna blóð hans í tvau ker ok einn ketil, ok heitir sá Óðreyrir, en kerin *heita Són ok Boðn. Peir blendu hunangi við blóðit ok varð þar af mjoðr sá er hverr er af drekkr verðr skáld eða fræðamaðr. Dvergarnir sogðu Ásum at Kvasir hefði kafnat í mannviti fyrir því at engi var þar svá fróðr at spyrja kynni hann fróðleiks.

'Þá buðu þessir dvergar til sín jotni þeim er Gillingr heitir ok konu hans. Þá buðu dvergarnir Gillingi at róa á sæ með sér. En er <þeir> fóru fyrir land fram, røru dvergarnir á boða ok hvelfði skipinu. Gillingr var ósyndr ok týndisk hann, en dvergarnir réttu skip sitt ok reru til lands. Þeir sogðu konu hans þenna atburð, en hon kunni illa ok grét hátt. Þá spurði Fjalarr hana ef henni mundi hugléttara ef hon sæi út á sæinn þar er hann hafði týnzk, en hon vildi þat. Þá mælti hann við Galar bróður sinn at hann skal fara upp yfir dyrrnar er hon gengi út ok láta kvernstein falla í hofuð henni, ok talði sér leiðask óp hennar, ok svá gerði hann. Þá er þetta spurði Suttungr bróðurson Gillings, ferr hann til ok tók dvergana ok flytr á sæ út ok setr þá í flæðarsker. Þeir biðja Suttung sér lífsgriða ok bjóða honum til sættar í foðurgjold mjoðinn dýra, ok þat verðr at sætt með þeim. Flytr Suttungr mjoðinn heim ok hirðir þar sem heita Hnitbjorg, setr þar til gæzlu dóttur sína Gunnlǫðu. Af þessu kǫllum vér skáldskap Kvasis blóð eða dverga drekku eða fylli eða nakkvars konar lǫg Óðreris eða Boðnar eða Sónar eða farskost dverga, fyrir því at sá mjǫðr f[lut]ti þeim fjǫrlausn ór skerinu, eða Suttunga mjǫð eða Hnitbjarga lǫgr.'

Pá mælir Ægir: 'Myrkt þykki mér þat mælt at kalla skáldskap með þessum heitum, en hvernig kómu þeir Æsir at Suttunga miði?'

Bragi svarar: 'Sjá saga er til bess at Óðinn fór heiman ok kom þar er þrælar níu slógu hey. Hann spyrr ef þeir vili at hann brýni ljá þeira. Þeir játa því. Þá tekr hann hein af belti sér ok brýndi, en þeim þótti bíta ljárnir myklu betr ok foluðu heinina. En hann mat svá at sá er kaupa vildi skyldi gefa við hóf, en allir kváðusk vilja ok báðu hann sér selja, en hann kastaði heininni í lopt upp. En er allir vildu henda þá skiptusk þeir svá við at hverr brá ljánum á háls gðrum. 15 Óðinn sótti til náttstaðar til jotuns þess er Baugi hét, bróðir Suttungs. Baugi kallaði ilt fjárhald sitt ok sagði at þrælar hans níu hofðu drepizk, en talðisk eigi vita sér ván verkmanna. En Óðinn nefndisk fyrir honum Bolverkr. Hann bauð at taka upp níu manna verk fyrir Bauga, en mælir sér til kaups einn drykk af Suttunga miði. Baugi *kvazk enskis *ráð eiga af miðinum, sagði at Suttungr vildi einn hafa, en fara kvezk hann mundu með Bolverki ok freista ef þeir fengi mjoðinn. Bolverkr vann um sumarit níu mannsverk fyrir Bauga, en at vetri beiddisk hann Bauga leigu sinnar. Þá fara þeir báðir «til Suttungs». Baugi segir Suttungi bróður sínum kaup þeira Bolverks, en Suttungr synjar þverliga hvers dropa af miðinum. Þá mælir Bolverkr til Bauga at þeir skyldu freista véla nokkvorra, ef beir megi ná miðinum, en Baugi lætr þat vel vera. Þá dregr Bolverkr fram nafar þann er Rati heitir ok mælir at Baugi skal bora bjargit ef nafarrinn bítr. Hann gerir svá. Þá segir Baugi at gognum er borat bjargit, en Bolverkr blæss í nafars raufina ok hrjóta spænirnir upp í móti honum. Þá fann hann at Baugi vildi svíkja hann, ok bað bora gognum bjargit. Baugi boraði enn. En er Bolverk (r) blés annat sinn, þá fuku inn spænirnir. Þá brásk Bolverkr í orms líki ok skreið í nafars raufina, en Baugi stakk eptir honum nafrinum ok misti hans. Fór Bolverkr þar til sem Gunnloð var ok *lá hjá henni þrjár nætr, ok þá lofaði hon honum at drekka af miðinum þrjá drykki. Í inum fyrsta drykk drakk hann al«t» ór Óðreri, en í oðrum ór Boðn, í inu«m» þriðja ór Són, ok hafði hann þá allan mjoðinn. Þá brásk hann í arnarham ok flaug sem ákafast. En er *Suttungr sá flug arnarins, tók hann sér arnarham ok flaug eptir honum. En er Æsir sá hvar Óðinn flaug þá settu *þeir út í garðinn ker sín, en er Óðinn kom inn of Ásgarð þá spýtti hann upp miðinum í kerin, en honum var þá svá nær komit at Suttungr mundi ná honum at hann sendi aptr suman mjǫðinn, ok var þess ekki gætt. Hafði þat hverr er vildi, ok kǫllum vér þat skáldfífla *hlut. En Suttunga mjǫð gaf Óðinn Ásunum ok þeim mǫnnum er yrkja kunnu. Því kǫllum v[ér] skáldskapinn feng Óðins ok fund ok drykk hans ok gjǫf hans ok drykk Ásanna.'

Þá mælir Ægir: 'Hversu á marga lund breytið þér orðtǫkum skáldskapar, eða hversu mǫrg eru kyn skáldskaparins?'

Þá mælir Bragi: 'Tvenn eru kyn þau er greina skáldskap allan.'

Ægir spyrr: 'Hver tvenn?'

Bragi segir: 'Mál ok hættir.'

'Hvert máltak er haft til skáldskapar?'

'Þrenn *er grein skáldskaparmáls.'

'Hver?'

'Svá: at nefna hvern hlut sem heitir; onnur grein er sú er heitir fornofn; in þriðja málsgrein er kolluð er kenning, ok <er> sú grein svá sett at vér kollum Óðin eða Þór eða Tý eða einnhvern af Ásum eða álfum, at hverr þeira er ek nefni til, þá tek ek með heiti af eign annars Ássins eða get ek hans verka nokkvorra. Þá eignask hann nafnit en eigi hinn er nefndr var, svá sem vér kollum Sigtý eða Hangatý eða Farmatý, þat er þá Óðins heiti, ok kollum vér þat kent heiti. Svá ok at kalla Reiðartý.'

En þetta er nú at segja ungum skáldum þeim er girnask at nema mál skáldskapar ok heyja sér orðfjǫlða með fornum heitum eða girnask þeir at kunna skilja þat er hulit er kveðit: þá skili hann þessa bók til fróðleiks ok skemtunar. En ekki er at gleyma eða ósanna svá þessar sǫgur at taka ór skáldskapinum for[nar ke]nningar þær er hǫfuðskáld hafa sér líka látit. En eigi skulu kristnir menn trúa á heiðin goð ok eigi á sannyndi þessar sagnar annan veg en svá sem hér finnsk í upphafi bókar er sagt er frá atburðum þeim er mannfólkit viltisk frá réttri trú, ok þá næst frá Tyrkjum, hvernig Asiamenn þeir er Æsir eru kallaðir fǫlsuðu frásagnir þær frá þeim tíðindum er gerðusk í Troju til þess at landfólkit skyldi trúa þá guð vera.

Priamus konungr í Troju var hǫfðingi mikill yfir ǫllum her Tyrkja ok hans synir váru tignastir af ǫllum her hans. Sá salr hinn ágæti er Æsir kǫlluðu Brimis sal eða bjórsal, þat var hǫll Priamus konungs. En þat er þeir gera langa frásogn of ragnrøkr, þat er Trojumanna orrosta. Pat er frá sagt at Okubórr engdi oxahofði ok dró at borði Miðgarðsorm, en ormrinn helt svá lífinu at hann søktisk í hafit. Eptir þeim dæmum er þetta sagt er Ektor drap Volukrontem ágætan kappa at ás<j>ánda inum mikla Akille ok teygði hann svá at sér með hofði hins drepna þess er þeir jofnuðu til oxans þess er Qkuþórr hafði hofuðit af. En er Akilleus var dreginn í þetta ófæri með sínu kappi þá var honum sú ein lífshjálpin at flýja undan banvænligu hoggvi Hektoris ok þó sárr. Svá er ok sagt at Ektor sótti svá ákafliga orrostuna ok svá miklir váru ofrhugir hans er hann sá Akilleus at engi hlutr var svá sterkr at standask mætti fyrir honum, ok er hann misti Akilleus ok hann var flýiðr þá sefaði hann svá reiði sína at hann drap þann kappa er Roddrus hét. Svá sogð uv Æsir at þá er Qkuþórr misti ormsins þá drap hann Ymi jotunn, en við ragnarøkr kom Miðgarðsormr váveifliga at Þór ok blés á hann eitri ok hjó hann 15 til bana, en eigi nentu Æsir at segja svá at Qkuþórr hefði þí látizk at einn stigi yfir hann dauðan þótt svá hefði verit, en meir hropuðu þeir frásogninni en satt var en þeir sogðu at Miðgarðsormr fengi þar bana. En þat færðu þeir til, þótt Akilleus bar banaorð af Ektori þá lá hann dauðr á sama velli af þeim sokum. Þat gerðu þeir Elenus ok Alexander. Þann Elenus kalla Æsir Ála. Þat segja þeir at hann hefndi bróður síns ok hann lifði þá er oll goðin váru dauð ok sloknaðr var eldrinn sá er brendr var Ásgarðr ok allar eignir goðanna. En Pirrus, honum jofnuðu þeir til Fenrisúlfs, hann drap Óðin, en Pirrus mátti vargr heita at þeira trú þvíat eigi þyrmði hann griðastǫðunum er 25 hann drap konunginn í hofinu fyrir stalla Þórs. Þat kalla þeir Surtaloga er Troja brann. En Móði ok Magni synir Qkuþórs kvámu at krefja landa Ála eða Viðar. Hann er Eneas, hann kom braut af Troju ok vann síðan stór verk. Svá er ok sagt at synir Ektoris kómu til Frigialands ok settusk sjálfir í þat ríki, en ráku í braut Elenum.

Enn skal láta heyra dæmin hvernig hǫfuðskáldin hafa látit sér sóma at yrkja eptir þessum heitum ok kenni<n>gum, svá sem segir Arnórr jarlaskáld at hann heiti Alfǫðr:

17 Nú skal enn segja dœmi af hverju þær kenni«n»gar eru er nú váru ritaðar, er áðr váru eigi dæmi til sogð, svá sem Bragi sagði Ægi at 'Þórr var farinn í Austrvega at berja troll, en Óðinn reið Sleipni í Jotunheima ok kom til þess jotuns er Hrungnir hét. Þá spyrr Hru<n>gnir hvat manna sá er með gullhjálminn er ríðr lopt ok log ok segir at hann á furðu góðan hest. Óðinn sagði at þar vill hann veðja fyrir hofði sínu at engi hestr skal vera jafngóðr í Jotunheimum. Hrungnir s[agði] at sá er góðr hestr, en hafa lézk hann mundu myklu stórfetaðra hest; sá heitir Gullfaxi. Hru<n>gnir varð reiðr ok hleypr upp á hest sinn ok hleypir eptir honum ok hyggr at launa honum ofrmæli. Óðinn hleypti svá mikit at hann var á oðru leiti fyrir, en Hrungnir var í svá miklum jotunmóð at hann fann eigi fyrr en hann sótti inn of Ásgrindr. Ok er hann kom at hallardurum, buðu Æsir honum til drykkju. Hann gekk í hollina ok bað fá sér drykkju. Váru þá teknar þær skálir er Þórr var vanr at drekka ór, ok snerti Hru«n>gnir ór hverri. En er hann gerðisk drukkinn þá skorti eigi stór orð. Hann lézk skyldu taka upp Valholl ok fœra í Jotunheima, en søkkva Ásgarði en drepa guð oll, nema Freyju ok Sif vill hann heim færa með sér. En Freyja fór þá at skenkja honum, ok drekka lézk hann mun d u alt Ása ol. En er Ásum leiddisk ofrefli hans þá nefna þeir Þór. Því næst kom Þórr í hollina ok hafði uppi á lopti hamarinn ok var allreiðr ok spyrr hverr því ræðr er jotnar hundvísir skulu þar drekka, eða hverr seldi Hrungni grið at vera í Valholl eða hví Freyja skal skenkja honum sem at gildi Ása. Þá svarar Hrungnir ok sér ekki vinaraugum til Þórs, sagði at Óðinn bauð honum til drykkju ok hann var á hans griðum. Þá mælir Þórr at þess boðs skal Hrungnir iðrask áðr hann komi út. Hrungnir segir at Ásaþór er þat lítill frami at drepa hann vápnlausan; hitt er meiri hugraun ef hann þorir berjask við hann at landamæri á Grjótúnagorðum.

"Ok hefir þat verit mikit fólskuverk," sagði hann, "er ek lét eptir heima skjǫld minn ok hein. En ef ek hefða hér vápn mín þá skyldu vit nú reyna hólmgǫnguna. En at ǫðrum kosti legg ek þér við níðingsskap ef þú vill drepa mik vápnlausan."

'Þórr vill fyrir øngan mun bila at koma til einvígis er honum var hólmr skoraðr, þvíat engi hefir honum þat fyrr veitt. Fór þá Hrungnir braut leið sína ok hleypti ákafliga þar til er hann kom í Jotunheima, ok var for hans allfræg með jotnum ok þat at stefnulag var komit á með þeim Þór. Þóttusk jotnar hafa mikit í ábyrgð, hvárr sigr fengi; þeim var ills ván at Þór ef Hrungnir létisk fyrir því at hann var þeira sterkastr. Þá gerðu jotnar mann á Grjótúnagorðum af leiri ok var hann níu rasta hár en þriggja breiðr undir hond, en ekki fengu þeir hjarta svá mikit at honum sómði fyrr en þeir tóku *ór *meri *nokkvorri, ok varð honum þat eigi stoðugt þá er Þórr kom. Hrungnir átti hjarta bat er frægt er, af horðum steini ok tindótt með þrim hornum svá sem síðan er gert var ristubragð þat er Hrungnis hjarta heitir. Af steini var ok hofuð hans. Skjoldr (hans) var ok steinn, víðr ok bjokkr, ok hafði hann skjǫldinn fyrir sér er hann stóð á Grjótúnagorðum ok beið Þórs, en hein hafði hann fyrir vápn ok reiddi of oxl ok var ekki dælligr. Á aðra hlið honum stóð leirjotunninn, er nefndr er Mokkurkálfi, ok var hann allhræddr. Svá er sagt at hann meig er hann sá Þór. Þórr fór til hólmstefnu ok með honum Þjálfi. Þá rann Þjálfi fram at þar er Hrungnir stóð ok mælti til hans:

"Pú stendr óvarliga, jǫtunn, hefir skjǫd>dinn fyrir þér, en Þórr hefir sét þik ok ferr hann it neðra í jǫrðu ok mun hann koma neðan at þér."

'Þá skaut Hrungnir skildinum undir fætr sér ok stóð á, en tvíhendi heinina. Því næst sá hann eldingar ok heyrði þrumur stórar. Sá hann þá Þór í ásmóði, fór hann ákafliga ok reiddi hamarinn ok kastaði um langa leið at Hrungni. Hrungnir færir upp heinina báðum hondum, kastar í mót. Mætir hon hamrinum á flugi, heinin, ok brotnar sundr heinin; fellr annarr hlutr á jorð ok eru þar af orðin oll heinberg. Annarr hlutr brast í hofði Þór svá at hann fell fram á jorð. En hamarrinn Mjollnir kom í mitt hofuð Hru negni ok lamði hausinn í smán mola ok fell hann fram yfir Þór svá at fótr hans lá of háls Þór.

5 En Þjálfi vá at Mokkurkálfa, ok fell hann við lítinn orðstír. Þá gekk Þjálfi til Þórs ok skyldi taka fót Hrungnis af honum ok gat hvergi valdit. Þá gengu til Æsir allir er þeir spurðu at Þórr var fallinn ok skyldu taka fótinn af honum ok fengu hvergi komit. Þá kom til Magni, sonr Þórs ok Járnsoxu. Hann var þá þrívetr. Hann kastaði fæti Hrungnis af Þór ok mælir:

"Sé þar ljótan harm, faðir, er ek kom svá síð. Ek hygg at jǫtun þenna mundak hafa lostit í Hel með hnefa mér ef ek hefða fundit hann."

'Þá stóð Þórr upp ok fagnaði vel syni sínum ok sagði hann mundu 15 verða mikinn fyrir sér.

"Ok vil ek," sagði hann, "gefa þér hestinn Gullfaxa, er Hrungnir hafði átt."

'Þá mælir Óðinn ok sagði at Þórr gerði rangt er hann gaf þann hinn góða hest gýgjarsyni en eigi foður sínum.

'*Pórr fór heim til Prúðvanga ok stóð heinin í hǫfði honum. Pá kom til vǫlva sú er Gróa hét, kona Aurvandils hins frækna. Hon gól galdra sína yfir Þór til þess er heinin losnaði. En er Þórr fann þat ok þótti þá ván at braut mundi ná heininni, þá vildi hann launa Gró lækningina ok gera hana fegna, sagði henni þau tíðindi at hann hafði vaðit norðan yfir Élivága ok hafði borit í meis á baki sér Aurvandil norðan ór Jǫtunheimum, ok þat til jartegna at ein tá hans hafði staðit ór meisinum ok var sú frerin svá at Þórr braut af ok kastaði upp á himin ok gerði af stjǫrnu þá er heitir Aurvandilstá. Þórr sagði at eigi mundi langt til at Aurvandill mundi heim, en Gróa varð svá fegin at hon munði ønga galdra, ok varð heinin eigi lausari ok stendr enn í hǫfði Þór; ok er þat boðit til varnanar at kasta hein of gólf þvert, þvíat þá hrærisk heinin í hǫfuð Þór.'

Pá mælir Ægir: 'Mikill þótti mér Hrungnir fyrir sér. Vann Þórr meira þrekvirki nokkvot þá er hann átti við trǫll?'

18 Pá svarar Bragi: 'Mikillar frásagnar er þat vert er Þórr fór til Geirrøðargarða. Þá hafði hann eigi hamarinn Mjǫllni eða megingjarðar 20 eða járngreipr, ok olli því Loki. Hann fór með honum, þvíat Loka hafði þat hent þá er hann flaug einu sinni at skemta sér með valsham Friggjar at hann flaug fyrir forvitni sakar í Geirrøðargarða ok sá þar hǫll mikla, settisk ok sá inn of glugg. En Geirrøðr leit í móti honum ok mælir at taka skyldi fuglinn ok færa honum. En sendimaðr komsk nauðuliga á hallar vegginn, svá var hann hár. Þat þótti Loka gott er hann sótti erfiðliga til hans ok ætlaði sér stund at fljúga eigi upp fyrr en hann hafði farit alt torleiðit. En er maðrinn sótti at honum þá beinir hann fluginn ok spyrnir við fast ok eru þá fætrnir fastir. Var Loki tekinn þar hondum ok færðr Geirrøði jotni. En er hann sá augu hans þá grunaði hann at maðr mundi vera ok bað hann svara, en Loki þagði. Þá læsti Geirrøðr Loka í kistu ok svelti hann þar þrjá mánuðr. En þá er Geirrøðr tók hann upp ok beiddi hann orða, ok sagði Loki hverr hann var, ok til *fjǫrlausnar vann hann Geirrøði þess eiða at hann skyldi koma Þór í Geirrøðargarða svá at hann hefði hvárki hamarinn né megingjarðar. Þórr kom til gistingar til gýgjar þeirar er Gríðr er kolluð. Hon var móðir Viðars hins þogla.

Hon sagði Þór satt frá Geirrøði at hann var jotunn hundvíss ok illr viðreignar. Hon léði honum megingjarða ok járngreipr er hon átti ok staf sinn er heitir Gríðarvolr. Þá fór Þórr til ár þeirar er Vimur heitir, allra á mest. Þá spenti hann sik megingjorðum ok studdi forstreymis Gríðarvol, en Loki helt undir megingjarðar. Ok þá er Þórr kom á miðja ána þá óx svá mjok áin at uppi braut á oxl honum. Þá kvað Þórr þetta:

(72) ""Vaxattu nú, Vimur,
alls mik þik vaða tíðir
jotna garða í;
veiztu ef þú vex
at þá vex mér ásmegin
jafnhátt upp sem himinn."

'Pá sér Pórr uppi í gljúfrum nokkvorum at Gjálp, dóttir Geirrøðar, stóð þar tveim megin árinnar ok gerði hon árvǫxtinn. Pá tók Þórr upp ór ánni stein mikinn ok kastaði at henni ok mælti svá:

"At ósi skal á stemma."

'Eigi misti hann þar er hann kastaði til. Ok í því bili bar hann at landi ok fekk tekit reynirunn nokkvorn ok steig svá ór ánni. Því er þat orðtak haft at reynir er bjorg Þórs.

'En er Þórr kom til Geirrøðar þá var þeim félogum vísat fyrst í geitahús til herbergis, ok var þar einn stóll til sætis ok sat þar Þórr. Þá varð hann þess varr at stóllinn fór undir honum upp at ræfri. Hann stakk Gríðarveli upp í raptana ok lét sígask fast á stólinn. Varð þá brestr mikill ok fylgði skrækr mikill. Þar hofðu verit undir stólinum dætr Geirrøðar Gjálp ok Greip, ok hafði hann brotit hrygginn í báðum.

'Pá lét Geirrøðr kalla Þór í hǫllina til leika. Þar váru eldar stórir eptir endilangri hǫllinni. En er Þórr kom í hǫllina gagnvart Geirrøði þá tók Geirrøðr með tǫng járnsíu glóandi ok kastar at Þór, en Þórr tók í móti með járngreipum ok færir á lopt síuna, en Geirrøðr hljóp undir járnsúlu at forða sér. Þórr kastaði síunni ok laust gǫgnum súluna ok gǫgnum Geirrøð ok gǫgnum vegginn ok svá fyrir útan ‹í› jorðina.'

(140) Upp skulum órum sverðum, úlfs tannlituðr, glitra; eigum dáð at drýgja í dalmiskunn fiska.

31 5 Hvernig skal kenna mann? Hann skal kenna við verk sín, þat er hann veitir eða þiggr eða gerir. Hann má ok kenna til eignar sinnar þeirar er hann á ok svá ef hann gaf, svá ok við ættir þær er hann kom af, svá þær er frá honum kómu. Hvernig skal hann kenna við þessa hluti? Svá at kalla hann vinnanda eða fremjanda eða (til) fara sinna eða athafnar, víga eða sæfara eða veiða eða vápna eða skipa. Ok fyrir því at hann er reynir vápnanna ok viðr víganna—alt eitt ok vinnandi; viðr heitir ok tré, reynir heitir tré-af þessum heitum hafa skáldin kallat menn ask eða hlyn, lund eða oðrum viðar heitum karlkendum ok kent til víga eða skipa eða fjár. Mann er ok rétt at kenna til allra Ása heita. Kent er ok við jotna heiti, ok er þat flest háð eða lastmæli. Vel þykkir kent til álfa. Konu skal kenna til alls kvenbúnaðar, gulls ok gimsteina, ols eða víns eða annars drykkjar þess er hon selr eða gefr, svá ok til olgagna ok til allra þeira hluta er henni samir at vinna eða veita. Rétt er at kenna hana svá at kalla hana selju eða lóg þess er hon miðlar, en selja eða lág, þat eru tré. Fyrir því er kona kǫlluð til kenningar ollum kvenkendum viðar heitum. En fyrir því er kona †kend til gimsteina eða glersteina, þat var í forneskju kvinna búnaðr er kallat var steinasørvi er þær hofðu á hálsi sér. Nú er svá fært til kenningar at konan er nú kend við stein eða við oll steins heiti. Kona er ok kend við allar Ásynjur eða nornir eða dísir. Konu er ok rétt at kenna við alla athofn sína eða við eign sína eða ætt.

Hvernig skal kenna gull? Sva at kalla þat eld Ægis ok barr Glasis, haddr Sifjar, hǫfuðband Fullu, grátr Freyju, munntal ok rǫdd ok orð jǫtna, dropa Draupnis ok regn eða skúr Draupnis eða augna Freyju, otrgjǫld, slǫggjald Ásanna, *sáð Fýrisvalla, haugþak Hǫlga, eldr allra vatna ok handar, grjót ok sker eða blik handar.

Fyrir hví er gull kallat eldr Ægis? Þessi saga er til þess, er fyrr er getit, at Ægir sótti heimboð til Ásgarðs, en er hann var búinn til heimferðar þá bauð hann til sín Óðni ok ǫllum Ásum á þriggja mánaða fresti. Til þeirar ferðar varð fyrst Óðinn ok Njǫrðr, Freyr, Týr, Bragi, Viðarr, Loki; svá ok Ásynjur, Frigg, Freyja, Gefjun, Skaði, Iðunn, Sif. Þórr var eigi þar. Hann var farinn í Austrveg at drepa trǫll. En er goðin hǫfðu sezk í sæti þá lét Ægir bera inn á hallargólf lýsigull þat er birti ok lýsti hǫllina sem eldr «ok þat var bar haft fyrir ljós at hans v[eiz]lu svá> sem í Valhollu váru sverðin fyrir eld. Þá senti Loki þar við ǫll goð ok drap þræl Ægis þann er Fimafengr hét. Annarr þræll hans er nefndr *Eldir. Rán er nefnd kona Ægis, en níu dœtr þeira, svá sem fyrr er ritat. At þeiri veizlu vannsk alt sjálft, bæði vist ok ǫl ok ǫll reiða er til veizlunnar þurfti. Pá urðu Æsir þess varir at Rán átti net þat er hon veiddi í menn alla þá er á sæ kómu. Nú er þessi saga til þess hvaðan af þat er, gull er kallat eldr eða ljós eða birti Ægis, Ránar eða Ægis dætra. Ok af beim kenningum er nu svá sett at gull er kallat eldr sævar ok allra hans heita, svá sem Ægir eða Rán eigu heiti við sæinn. Ok þaðan af er nú gull kallat eldr vatna eða á ok allra árheita. En þessi heiti hafa svá farit sem onnur ok kenningar, at hin yngri skáld hafa ort eptir dæmum hinna gomlu skálda, svá sem stóð í þeira kvæðum, en sett síðan út í hálfur þær er þeim þóttu líkar við þat er fyrr var ort, svá sem vatnit er sænum en áin vatninu en lækr ánni. Því er þat kallat nýgervingar alt er út er sett heiti lengra en fyrr finnsk, ok þykkir þat vel alt er með líkindum ferr ok eðli. Svá kvað Bragi skáld:

(141) Eld of þák af jǫfri ǫlna bekks við drykkju —þat gaf—Fjǫlnis fjalla með fulli mér stillir.

Hví er gull kallat barr eða lauf Glasis? Í Ásgarði fyrir durum Valhallar stendr lundr sá er Glasir er kallaðr, en lauf hans alt er gull rautt, svá sem hér er kveðit at (142) Glasir stendr með gullnu laufi fyrir Sigtýs solum.

Sá er viðr *fegrstr með goðum ok mǫnnum.

Hví er gull kallat haddr Sifjar? Loki Laufeyjarson hafði þat gert til lævísi at klippa hár alt af Sif. En er Þórr varð þess *varr, tók hann Loka ok mundi lemja hvert bein í honum áðr hann svarði þess at hann skal fá af svartálfum at þeir skulu gera af gulli Sifju hadd þann er svá skal vaxa sem annat hár. Eptir þat fór Loki til þeira dverga er heita Ívalda synir, ok gerðu þeir haddinn ok Skíðblaðni ok geirinn er Óðinn átti er Gungnir heitir. Þá *veðjaði Loki hǫfði sínu við þann dverg er «Brokkr» heitir, hvárt bróðir hans «Eitri» mundi gera jafngóða gripi þrjá sem þessir váru. En er þeir kómu til smiðju, þá lagði «Eitri» svínskinn í aflinn ok bað blása «Brokk» ok létta eigi fyrr en at tæki þat ór aflinum er hann lagði í. En þegar er hann gekk ór smiðjunni en hinn blés, þá settisk fluga ein á hond honum ok kroppaði, en hann blés sem áðr þar til er smiðrinn tók ór aflinum, ok var þat goltr ok var bur«s»tin ór gulli. Því næst lagði hann í aflinn gull ok bað hann blása ok hætta eigi fyrr blæstrinum en hann kvæmi aptr. Gekk á braut. En þá kom flugan ok settisk á háls honum ok kroppaði nú hálfu fastara, en hann blés þar til er smiðrinn tók ór aflinum gullhring þann er Draupnir heitir. Þá lagði hann járn í aflinn ok bað hann blása ok sagði at ónýtt mundi verða ef blástrinn felli. Þá settisk flugann milli augna honum ok kroppaði hvarmana, en er blóðit fell í augun svá at hann sá ekki, þá greip hann til hendinni sem skjótast meðan belgrinn lagðisk niðr ok sveipti af sér flugunni. Ok þá kom þar smiðrinn at, sagði at nú lagði nær at alt mundi ónýtask er í aflinum var. Þá tók hann ór aflinum «hamar». Fekk hann þá alla gripina í hendr bróður sínum «Brokk» ok bað hann fara með til Ásgarðs ok leysa veðjun«i»na. En er þeir Loki báru fram gripina, þá settusk Æsirnir á dómstóla ok skyldi þat atkvæði standask sem segði Óðinn, Þórr, Freyr. Þá gaf Loki Óðni geirinn Gungni, en Þór haddinn er Sif skyldi hafa, en Frey Skíðblaðni, ok sagði skyn á ollum gripum, at *geirrinn nam aldri staðar í lagi, en haddrinn var holdgróinn þegar er hann kom á hofuð Sif, en Skíðblaðnir hafði byr þegar er segl kom á lopt, hvert er fara skyldi, en mátti vefja saman sem dúk ok hafa í pung sér ef þat vildi. Þá bar fram «Brokkr» sína gripi. Hann gaf Óðni hringinn ok sagði at ina níundu hverja nótt mundi drjúpa af honum átta hringar jafnhofgir sem hann. En Frey gaf hann goltinn ok sagði at hann mátti renna lopt ok log nótt ok dag meira en hverr hestr, ok aldri varð svá myrkt af nótt eða í myrkheimum at eigi væri ærit ljóst þar er hann fór, svá lýsti af burstinni. Þá gaf hann Þór hamarinn ok sagði at hann mundi mega ljósta svá stórt sem hann vildi, hvat sem fyrir væri, ok eigi mundi hamarrinn bila, ok ef hann vyrpi honum til þá mundi hann aldri missa, ok aldri fljúgja svá langt at eigi mundi hann sækja heim hond. Ok ef hann vildi, þá var hann svá lítill at hafa mátti í serk sér. En þat var lýti á at forskeptit var heldr skamt. Þat var dómr þeira at hamarrinn var beztr af ǫllum gripum ok mest vorn í fyrir hrímbursum, ok dæmðu þeir at dvergrinn ætti veðféit. Þá bauð Loki at leysa hofuð sitt. Dvergrinn svarar, sagði at þess var engi ván.

'Taktu mik þá,' kvað Loki.

En hann vildi taka hann; þá var hann víðs fjarri. Loki átti skúa er hann rann á lopt ok lǫg. Þá bað dvergrinn Þór at hann skyldi taka hann, en hann gerði svá. Þá vildi dvergrinn hǫggva af Loka hǫfuð, en Loki sagði at hann átti hǫfuð en eigi hálsinn. Þá tók dvergrinn þveng ok kníf ok vill stinga rauf á vǫrrum Loka ok vill rifa saman munninn, en knífrinn beit ekki. Þá mælti hann at betri væri þar Alr bróðir hans, en jafnskjótt sem hann nefndi hann, þá var þar alrinn ok beit hann varrarnar. *Rifaði hann saman varrarnar ok reif ór æsunum. Sá þvengr er muðrinn Loka var saman rifaðr heitir Vartari.

Hér heyrir at gull er kent til hǫfuðbands Fullu, er orti Eyvindr skáldaspillir:

(143) Fullu skein á fjǫllum fallsól brá vallar Ullar kjóls of allan aldr Hákunar skaldum.

Gull er kallat grátr Freyju sem fyrr er sagt. Svá kvað Skúli Þorsteinsson: 37

(144) Margr of hlaut of morgin morðelds þar er vér feldumsk Freyju tár at fleiri fárbjóðr. At þar várum.

Ok sem kvað Einarr Skúlason:

(145) Par er Mardallar milli meginhurðar liggr skurða Gauts berum galla þrútinn grátr dalreyðar látra.

Ok hér hefir Einarr enn kent svá Freyju at kalla hana móður Hnossar eða konu Óðs; svá segir hér:

(146) Eigi þverr fyrir augna Óðs beðvinu Róða ræfs—eignisk svá—regni *ramsvell—konungr elli.

Ok enn svá:

Hér er hon kǫlluð Gefn ok Vana brúðr. Til allra heita Freyju er rétt at kenna grátinn ok kalla svá gullit, ok á marga lund er þessum kenningum breytt, kallat hagl eða regn eða él eða dropar eða skúrir eða forsar augna hennar eða kinna eða hlýra eða brá eða hvarma.

Hér má þat heyra at kallat er orð eða rǫdd jǫtna gullit, svá sem fyrr er sagt. Svá kvað Bragi skáld:

30 (150) Pann átta ek vin verstan *vazt- *rǫdd en mér baztan Ála -undirkúlu *óniðraðan þriðja.

Hann kallaði stein vazta undirkúlu—steinninn—en jǫtun *Ála stensins, en gull rodd jotuns.

Sú er sok til þess at gull er kallat otrgjold: svá er sagt at þá er Æsir fóru at kanna heim allan, Óðinn ok Loki ok Hænir, þeir kómu at á nokkvorri ok gengu með ánni til fors nokkvors, ok við forsinn var otr einn ok hafði tekit lax ór forsinum ok át blundandi. Þá tók Loki upp stein ok kastaði at otrinum ok laust í hǫfuð honum. Þá hrósaði Loki veiði sinni, at hann hefði veitt í einu hoggvi otr ok lax. Tóku beir þá laxinn ok otrinn ok báru með sér, kómu þá at bæ nokkvorum ok gengu inn. En sá búandi er nefndr Hreiðmarr er þar bjó. Hann var mikill fyrir sér ok mjok fjolkunnigr. Beiddusk Æsir at hafa þar náttstað ok kváðusk hafa með sér vist ærna ok sýndu búandanum veiði sína. En er Hreiðmarr sá otrinn, þá kallaði hann sonu sína, Fáfni ok Regin, ok segir at Otr, bróðir þeira, var drepinn ok svá hverir þat hofðu gert. Nú ganga þeir feðgar at Ásunum ok taka þá hondum ok binda ok segja þá um otrinn at hann var sonr Hreiðmars. Æsir bjóða fyrir sik fjorlausn svá mikit fé sem Hreiðmarr sjálfr vill á kveða, ok varð þat at sætt með þeim ok bundit svardogum. Þá var otrinn fleginn. Tók Hreiðmarr otrbelginn ok mælir við þá at þeir skulu fylla belginn af rauðu gulli ok svá hylja hann allan ok svá skal þat vera at sætt þeira. Þá sendi Óðinn Loka í Svartálfaheim ok kom hann til dvergs bess er heitir *Andvari. Hann var fiskr í vatni, ok tók Loki hann hondum ok lagði á hann fjorlausn alt gull þat er hann átti í steini sínum. Ok er þeir koma í steininn, þá bar dvergrinn fram alt gull þat er hann átti, ok var þat allmikit fé. Þá svipti dvergrinn undir họnd sér einum litlum gullbaug. Þá sá Loki ok bað hann fram láta bauginn. Dvergrinn bað hann taka eigi bauginn af sér ok lézk mega œxla sér fé af bauginum ef hann heldi. Loki kvað hann eigi skyldu hafa einn penning eptir ok tók bauginn af honum ok gekk út, en dvergrinn mælti at sá baugr skyldi vera hverjum hofuðsbani er átti. Loki segir at honum þótti þat vel ok sagði at þat skyldi haldask mega fyrir því, sá formáli, at hann skyldi flytja þeim til eyrna er þá tœki við. Fór hann í braut til Hreiðmars ok sýndi Óðni gullit. En er hann sá bauginn þá sýndisk honum fagr ok tók hann af fénu, en greiddi Hreiðmari gullit. Þá fyldi hann otrbelginn sem mest mátti hann ok setti upp er fullr var. Gekk þá Óðinn til ok skyldi hylja belginn með gullinu, ok þá mælir hann við Hreiðmar at hann skal sjá hvárt belgrinn er þá allr hulðr. En Hreiðmarr leit til ok hugði at vandliga ok sá eitt granahár ok bað þat hylja, en at oðrum kosti væri lokit sætt þeira. Pá dró Óðinn fram bauginn ok hulði granahárit ok sagði at þá váru þeir lausir frá otrgjǫldunum. En er Óðinn hafði tekit geir sinn en Loki skúa sína ok þurftu þá ekki at óttask, þá mælti Loki at þat skyldi haldask er Andvari hafði mælt, at sá baugr ok þat gull skyldi verða þess bani er átti, ok þat helzk síðan. Nú er þat sagt <af>hverju gull er otrgjǫld kallat eða nauðgjald Ásanna eða rógmálmr.

Hvat er fleira at segja frá gullinu? Hreiðmarr tók þá gullit at sonargjǫldum, en Fáfnir ok Reginn beiddusk af nokkvors í bróðurgjǫld. Hreiðmarr unni þeim enskis pennings af gullinu. Þat varð óráð þeira bræðra at þeir drápu fǫður sinn til gullsins. Þá beiddisk Reginn at Fáfnir skyldi skipta gullinu í helminga með þeim. Fáfnir svarar svá at lítil ván var at hann mundi miðla gullit við bróður sinn er hann drap fǫður sinn til gullsins ok bað Regin fara braut, en at ǫðrum kosti mundi hann fara sem Hreiðmarr. Fáfnir hafði þá tekit hjálm er Hreiðmarr hafði átt ok setti á hǫfuð sér er kallaðr var ægishjálmr er ǫll kvikvendi hræðask er sjá, ok sverð þat er Hrotti heitir. Reginn hafði þat sverð er Refill er kallaðr. Flýði hann þá braut, en Fáfnir fór upp á Gnitaheiði ok gerði sér þar ból ok brásk í orms líki ok lagðisk á gullit.

Reginn fór þá til Hjálpreks konungs á Þjóði ok gerðisk þar smiðr hans. Þá tók hann þar til fóstrs Sigurð, son Sigmundar, sonar Volsungs, ok son Hjordísar, dóttur Eylima. Sigurðr var ágætastr allra herkonunga af ætt ok afli ok hug. Reginn sagði honum til hvar Fáfnir lá á gullinu ok eggjaði hann at sækja gullit. Þá gerði Reginn sverð þat er Gramr <heitir> at svá hvast var at Sigurðr brá niðr í rennanda vatn ok tók í sundr ullarlagð er rak fyrir strauminum at sverðs egginni. Því næst klauf Sigurðr steðja Regins ofan í stokkinn með sverðinu. Eptir þat fóru þeir Sigurðr ok Reginn á Gnitaheiði. Þá gróf Sigurðr grǫf á veg Fáfnis ok settisk þar í. En er Fáfnir skreið til vatns ok hann kom yfir grofna, þá lagði Sigurðr sverðinu í gognum hann ok var þat hans bani. Kom þá Reginn at ok sagði at hann hefði drepit bróður hans ok bauð honum þat at sætt at hann skyldi taka hjarta Fáfnis ok steikja við eld. En Reginn lagðisk niðr ok drakk blóð Fáfnis ok lagðisk at sofa. En er Sigurðr steikti hjartat ok hann hugði at fullsteikt mundi ok tók á fingrinum hvé hart var, en er frauðit rann ór hjartanu á fingrinn þá brann hann ok drap fingrinum í munn sér. En er hjartablóðit kom á tunguna þá kunni hann fugls rodd ok skilði hvat igðurnar sogðu er sátu í viðnum. Þá mælti ein:

(151) Par sitr Sigurðr sveita stokkinn, Fáfnis hjarta við funa steikir. Spakr þætti mér spillir bauga ef fjorsega fránan æti.

Pá gekk Sigurðr til Regins ok drap hann, en síðan til hests síns er Grani heitir, ok reið til þess er hann kom til bóls Fáfnis, tók þá upp gullit ok batt í klyfjar ok lagði upp á bak Grana ok steig upp sjálfr ok reið þá leið sína. Nú er þat sagt hver saga til er þess, gullit er kallat ból eða bygð Fáfnis eða málmr Gnitaheiðar eða byrðr Grana.

20

Pá reið Sigurðr til þess er hann fann á fjallinu hús. Þar svaf inni ein kona ok hafði sú hjálm ok brynju. Hann brá sverðinu ok reist brynjuna af henni. Þá vaknaði hon ok nefndisk Hildr. Hon er kolluð Brynhildr ok var valkyrja. Sigurðr reið þaðan ok kom til þess konungs er Gjúki hét. Kona hans er nefnd Grímhildr. Born þeira váru þau Gunnarr, Hogni, Guðrún, Guðný. Gothormr var stjúpsonr Gjúka. Par dvalðisk Sigurðr langa hríð. Þá fekk hann Guðrúnar Gjúkadóttur, en Gunnarr ok Hogni sórusk í bræðralag við Sigurð. Því næst fóru beir Sigurðr ok Gjúkasynir at biðja Gunnari konu til Atla Buðlasonar, Brynhildar, systur hans. Hon sat á Hindafjalli ok var um sal hennar vafrlogi, en hon hafði þess heit strengt at eiga þann einn mann er borði at ríða vafrlogann. Þá riðu þeir Sigurðr ok Gjúkungar (þeir eru ok kallaðir Niflungar) upp á fjallit ok skyldi þá Gunnarr ríða vafrlogann. Hann átti hest þann er Goti heitir, en sá hestr þorði eigi at hlapa í eldinn. Þá skiptu þeir litum Sigurðr ok Gunnarr ok svá nofnum, þvíat Grani vildi undir øngum manni ganga nema Sigurði. Þá hljóp

25

Sigurðr á Grana ok reið vafrlogann. Þat kveld gekk hann at brúðlaupi með Brynhildi. En er þau kvámu í sæing þá dró hann sverðit Gram ór slíðrum ok lagði í milli þeira. En at morni þá er hann stóð upp ok klæddi sik, þá gaf hann Brynhildi at línfé gullbauginn þann er Loki hafði tekit af Andvara, en tók af henni annan baug til minja. Sigurðr hljóp þá á hest sinn ok reið til félaga sinna. Skipta þeir Gunnarr þá aptr litum ok fóru aptr til Gjúka með Brynhildi. Sigurðr átti tvau born með Guðrúnu, Sigmund ok Svanhildi.

Pat var eitt sinn at Brynhildr ok Guðrún gengu til vatns at bleikja hadda sína. Þá er þær kómu til árinnar þá óð Brynhildr út á ána frá landi ok mælir at hon vildi eigi bera í hǫfuð sér þat vatn er rynni ór hári Guðrúnu, þvíat hon átti búanda hugaðan betr. Þá gekk Guðrún á ána eptir henni ok sagði at hon mátti fyrir því þvá ofar sinn hadd í ánni at hon átti þann mann er eigi Gunnarr ok engi annarr í verǫldu var jafnfrækn, þvíat hann vá Fáfni ok Regin ok tók arf eptir báða þá. Þá svarar Brynhildr:

'Meira var þat vert er Gunnarr reið vafrlogann, en Sigurðr þorði eigi.'

Pá hló Guðrún ok mælti: 'Ætlar þú at Gunnarr riði vafrlogann? Sá ætla ek at gengi í rekkju hjá þér er mér gaf gullbaug þenna, en sá gullbaugr er þú hefir á hendi ok þú þátt at línfé, hann er kallaðr Andvaranautr, ok ætlak at eigi sótti Gunnarr hann á Gnitaheiði.'

Pá þagnaði Brynhildr ok gekk heim. Eptir þat eggjaði hon Gunnar ok Hogna at drepa Sigurð, en fyrir því at þeir váru eiðsvarar Sigurðar þá eggjuðu þeir til Gothorm, bróður sinn, at drepa Sigurð. Hann lagði Sigurð sverði í gognum sofanda, en er hann fekk sárit þá kastaði hann sverðinu Gram eptir honum svá at sundr sneið í miðju manninn. Þar fell Sigurðr ok sonr hans þrévetr <er>
 Sigmundr hét er þeir drápu. Eptir þat lagði Brynhildr sik sverði ok var hon brend með Sigurði, en Gunnarr ok Hogni tóku þá Fáfnis arf ok Andvaranaut ok réðu þá londum.

Atli konungr Buðlason, bróðir Brynhildar, fekk þá Guðrúnar er Sigurðr hafði átta, ok áttu þau born. Atli konungr bauð til sín Gunnari ok Hogna, en þeir fóru at heimboðinu. En áðr þeir fóru síðan þá fálu þeir gullit Fáfnis arf í Rín, ok hefir þat gull aldri síðan fundizk. En Atli konungr hafði þar lið fyrir ok barðisk við Gunnar ok Hogna ok urðu þeir handteknir. Lét Atli konungr skera hjarta ór Hogna kykvum. Var þat hans bani. Gunnari lét hann kasta í ormgarð, en honum var fengin leyniliga harpa ok sló hann með tánum þvíat hendr hans váru bundnar, svá at allir ormarnir sofnuðu nema sú naðra er rendi at honum ok hjó svá fyrir flagbrjóskat at hon steypti hǫfðinu inn í holit ok hangði hon á lifrinni þar til er hann dó. Gunnarr ok Hogni eru kallaðir Niflungar ok Gjúkungar. Fyrir því er gull kallat Niflunga skattr eða arfr. Litlu síðar drap Guðrún tvá sonu sína ok lét gera með gulli ok silfri borðker af hausum þeira, ok þá var gert erfi Niflunga. At þeiri veizlu lét Guðrún skenkja Atla konungi með þeim borðkerum mjoð ok var blandit við blóði sveinanna, en hjortu þeira lét hon steikja ok fá konungi at eta. En er þat var gert þá sagði hon honum sjálfum með morgum ófogrum orðum. Eigi skorti þar áfenginn mjoð svá at flest fólk sofnaði þar sem sat. Á beiri nótt gekk hon til konungs er hann svaf ok með henni sonr Hogna ok vágu at honum. Þat var hans bani. Þá skutu þau eldi á hollina ok brann þat fólk er þar var inni. Eptir þat fór hon til sjóvar ok hljóp á sæinn ok vildi týna sér, en hana rak yfir fjorðinn, kom þá á þat land er átti Jónakr konungr. En er hann sá hana tók hann hana til sín ok fekk hennar. Áttu þau þrjá sonu er svá hétu: Sorli, Hamðir, Erpr. Þeir váru allir svartir sem hrafn á hárslit sem Gunnarr ok Hogni ok aðrir Niflungar. Þar fæddisk upp Svanhildr, dóttir Sigurðar sveins. Hon var allra kvinna fegrst. Þat spurði Jormunrekkr konungr hinn ríki. Hann sendi son sinn Randvé at biðja hennar sér til handa. En er hann kom til Jónakrs þá var Svanhildr seld honum í hendr. Skyldi hann færa hana Jormunrekk. Þá sagði Bikki at þat var betr fallit at Randvér ætti Svanhildi, er hann var ungr ok bæði þau en Jormunrekkr var gamall. Þetta ráð líkaði þeim vel inum ungum monnum. Því næst sagði Bikki þetta konungi. Þá lét Jormunrekkr konungr taka son sinn ok leiða til gálga. Þá tók Randvér hauk sinn ok plokkaði af fjaðrarnar ok bað senda feðr sínum. Þá var hann hengðr. En er Jormunrekkr konungr sá haukinn þá kom honum í hug at svá sem haukrinn var ófleygr ok fjaðrlauss, ok svá var ríki hans ófært er hann var gamall ok sonlauss. Þá lét Jormunrekkr konungr, er hann reið ór skógi frá veiðum með hirð sína, en Svanhildr drottning sat at haddbliki, þá riðu þeir á hana ok tráðu hana undir hesta fótum til bana. En er betta spurði Guðrún þá eggjaði hon sonu sína til hefndar eptir Svanhildi. En er þeir bjoggusk til ferðar þá fekk hon þeim brynjur ok hjálma svá sterka at eigi mundi járn á festa. Hon lagði ráð fyrir þá at þá er þeir kvæmi til Jormunrekks konungs, at þeir skyldu ganga of nótt at honum sofanda. Skyldi Sorli ok Hamðir hoggva af honum hendr ok fætr en Erpr hofuðit. En er þeir kómu á leið þá spurðu þeir Erp hver liðsemð þeim mundi at honum ef þeir hitti Jǫrmunrekk konung. Hann svarar at hann mundi veita þeim þvílíkt sem hǫnd fæti. Þeir segja at þat var alls ekki at fótr styddisk við hǫnd. Þeir váru svá reiðir móður sinni er hon hafði leitt þá út með heiptyrðum, ok þeir vildu gera þat er henni þætti verst ok drápu Erp, þvíat hon unni honum mest. Litlu síðar er Sǫrli gekk skriðnaði hann ǫðrum fæti, studdi sik með hendinni. Þá mælir hann:

'Veitti nú <hondin> fætinum. Betr væri nú at Erpr lifði.'

En er þeir kómu til Jǫrmunrekks konungs of nótt þar sem hann svaf, ok hjoggu af honum hendr ok fætr, svá vaknaði hann ok kallaði á menn sína, bað þá vaka. Þá mælir Hamðir:

'Af mundi nú hofuðit ef Erpr lifði.'

Pá stóðu upp hirðmenninir ok sóttu þá ok fengu eigi sótt þá með vápnum. Pá kallaði Jǫrmunrekkr at þá skal berja grjóti. Var svá gert. Þar fellu þeir Sǫrli ok Hamðir. Þá var ok dauð ǫll ætt ok afkvæmi Gjúka.

Eptir Sigurð svein lifði dóttir er Áslaug hét er fædd var at Heimis í Hlymdǫlum, ok eru þaðan ættir komnar stórar. Svá er sagt at Sigmundr Vǫlsungsson var svá máttugr at hann drakk eitr ok sakaði ekki, en Simfjǫtli, sonr hans, ok Sigurðr váru svá harðir á húðna at þá sakaði ekki eitr at útan kvæmi á þá bera. Því hefir Bragi skáld svá kveðit:

(153) Pá er forns Litar flotna á fangboða ǫngli hrøkkviáll of hrokkinn hekk Vǫlsunga drekku.

Eptir þessum sǫgum hafa flest skáld ort ok tekit ymsa þáttu. Bragi hinn gamli orti um fall Sǫrla ok Hamðis í drápu þeiri er hann orti um Ragnar loðbrók:

30 (154) Knátti eðr við illan
Jǫrmunrekkr at vakna
með dreyrfár dróttir
draum í sverða flaumi.
Rósta varð í ranni
Randvés hǫfuðniðja
þá er hrafnbláir hefndu
harma Erps of barmar.

Hví er gull kallat mjǫl Fróða? Til þess er saga sjá at Skjǫldr hét sonr Óðins er Skjǫldungar eru frá komnir. Hann hafði atsetu ok réð lǫndum þar sem nú er kǫlluð Danmǫrk en þá var kallat Gotland. Skjǫldr átti þann son er Friðleifr hét er lǫndum réð eptir hann. Sonr Friðleifs hét Fróði. Hann tók konungdóm eptir fǫður sinn í þann tíð er Augustus keisari lagði frið of heim allan. Þá var Kristr borinn. En fyrir því at Fróði var allra konunga ríkastr á Norðrlǫndum þá var

Ragnarr ok fjǫlð sagna.

honum kendr friðrinn um alla Danska tungu, ok kalla Norðmenn þat Fróða frið. Engi maðr grandaði gðrum þótt hann hitti fyrir sér fǫðurbana eða bróðurbana lausan eða bundinn. Þá var ok engi þjófr eða ránsmaðr, svá at gullhringr einn lá á Jalangrsheiði lengi. Fróði konungr sótti heimboð í Svíþjóð til þess konungs er Fjǫlnir er nefndr. Þá keypti hann ambáttir tvær er hétu Fenja ok Menja. Þær váru miklar ok sterkar. Í þann tíma fannsk í Danmork kvernsteinar tveir svá miklir at engi var svá sterkr at dregit gæti. En sú náttúra fylgði kvernunum at þat mólsk á kverninni sem sá mælir fyrir er mól. Sú kvern hét Grotti. Hengikjoptr er sá nefndr er Fróða konungi gaf kvernina. Fróði konungr lét leiða ambáttirnar til kvernarinnar ok bað þær mala gull ok frið ok sælu Fróða. Þá gaf hann þeim eigi lengri hvíld eða svefn en gaukrinn þagði eða hljóð mátti kveða. Þá er sagt at þær kvæði ljóð þau er kallat er Grottasongr. Ok áðr létti kvæðinu mólu þær her at Fróða svá at á þeiri nótt kom þar sá sækonungr er Mýsingr hét ok drap Fróða, tók þar herfang mikit. Þá lagðisk Fróða friðr. Mýsingr hafði með sér Grotta ok svá Fenju ok Menju ok bað þær mala salt. Ok at miðri nótt spurðu þær ef eigi leiddisk Mýsingi salt. Hann bað þær *mala lengr. Þær mólu litla hríð áðr niðr sukku skipin ok var þar eptir svelgr í hafinu er særinn fellr í kvernaraugat. Þá varð sær saltr.

Svá kvað Egill:

(184) Glaðar flotna fjǫlð við Fróða mjǫl.

Konungr einn í Danmork er nefndr Hrólfr kraki. Hann er ágætastr fornkonunga fyrst af mildi ok fræknleik ok lítillæti. Þat er eitt mark um lítillæti hans er mjok er fært í frásagnir at einn lítill sveinn ok fátækr er nefndr Voggr. Hann kom í holl Hrólfs konungs. Þá var konungrinn ungr at aldri ok grannligr á voxt. Þá gekk Voggr fyrir hann ok sá upp á hann. Þá mælir konungrinn:

'Hvat viltu mæla, sveinn, er þú sér á mik?'

Voggr segir: 'Þá er ek var heima, heyrðak sagt at Hrólfr konungr at Hleiðru var mestr maðr á Norðrlondum, en nú sitr hér í hásæti kraki einn lítill ok kallið þér hann konung sinn.'

Þá svarar konungrinn: 'Þú, sveinn, hefir gefit mér nafn, at ek skal heita Hrólfr kraki, en þat er títt at gjǫf skal fylgja nafnfesti. Nú sé ek þik enga gjǫf hafa til at gefa mér at nafnfesti þá er mér sé þægilig. Nú skal sá gefa ǫðrum er til hefir,' tók gullhring af hendi sér ok gaf honum. Þá mælir Vǫggr:

'Gef þú allra konunga heilastr, ok þess strengi ek heit at verða þess manns bani er þinn banamaðr verðr.'

Þá mælir konungr ok hló við: 'Litlu verðr Voggr feginn.'

Annat mark var þat sagt frá Hrólfi kraka um fræknleik hans at sá konungr réð fyrir Uppsolum er Aðils hét. Hann átti Yrsu, móður Hrólfs kraka. Hann hafði ósætt við þann konung er réð fyrir Nóregi er Áli hét. Þeir stefndu orrostu milli sín á ísi vatns þess er Væni heitir. Aðils konungr sendi boð Hrólfi kraka, mági sínum, at hann kvæmi til liðveizlu við hann ok hét mála ollum her hans meðan þeir væri í ferðinni, en konungr sjálfr skyldi eignask þrjá kostgripi þá er hann kaus ór Svíþjóð. Hrólfr konungr mátti eigi fara fyrir ófriði þeim er hann átti við Saxa, en þó sendi hann Aðilsi berserki sína tólf. Þar var einn Boðvarr bjarki ok Hjalti hugprúði, Hvítserkr hvati, Vottr, *Véseti, þeir bræðr Svipdagr ok Beiguðr. Í þeiri orrostu fell Áli konungr ok mikill hluti liðs hans. Þá tók Aðils konungr af honum dauðum hjálminn Hildisvín ok hest hans Hrafn. Þá beiddusk þeir berserkir Hrólfs kraka at taka mála sinn, þrjú pund gulls hverr þeira, ok um fram beiddusk þeir at flytja Hrólfi kraka kostgripi þá er þeir kuru til handa honum. Þat var hjálmrinn Hildigoltr ok brynjan Finnsleif er hvergi festi vápn á ok gullhringr sá er kallaðr var Svíagríss er átt hǫfðu langfeðgar Aðils. En konungr varnaði allra gripanna ok eigi heldr galt hann málann. Fóru berserkirnir braut ok unðu illa sínum hlut, sǫgðu svá búit Hrólfi kraka ok jafnskjótt byrjaði hann ferð sína til Uppsala. Ok er hann kom skipum sínum í ána Fýri þá reið hann til Uppsala ok með honum tólf berserkir hans, allir griðalausir. Yrsa, móðir hans, fagnaði honum ok fylgði honum til herbergis ok eigi til konungs hallar. Váru þá gervir eldar stórir fyrir þeim ok gefit ǫl at drekka. Þá kómu menn Aðils konungs inn ok báru skíðin á eldinn ok gerðu svá mikinn at klæði brunnu af þeim Hrólfi ok mæltu:

'Er þat satt at Hrólfr kraki ok berserkir hans flýja hvárki eld né járn?'

Pá hljóp *Hrólfr kraki upp ok allir þeir. Þá mælti hann:

'Aukum enn elda at Aðils húsum!'—tók skjǫld sinn ok kastaði á eldinn ok hljóp yfir eldinn meðan skjǫldrinn brann ok mælti enn: 'Flýra sá elda er yfir hleypr.'

Svá fór hverr at qðrum hans manna, tóku þá er eldinn hǫfðu aukit ok kǫstuðu þeim á eldinn. Þá kom Yrsa ok fekk Hrólfi kraka dýrshorn fult af gulli ok þar með hringinn Svíagrís ok bað þá braut ríða til liðsins. Þeir hljópu á hesta sína ok ríða ofan á Fýrisvǫllu. Þá sá þeir at Aðils konungr reið eptir þeim með her sinn alvápnaðan ok vill drepa þá. Tók Hrólfr kraki hægri hendi gullit ofan í hornit ok søri alt um gǫtuna. En er Svíar sjá þat, hlaupa þeir ór sǫðlunum ok tók hverr slíkt er fekk, en Aðils konungr bað þá ríða ok reið sjálfr ákafliga. Slu<n>gnir hét hestr hans, allra hesta skjótastr. Þá sá Hrólfr kraki at Aðils konungr reið nær honum, tók þá hringinn Svíagrís ok kastaði til hans ok bað hann þiggja at gjǫf. Aðils konungr reið at hringinum ok tók til með spjótsoddinum ok rendi upp á falinn. Þá veyk Hró<l>fr kraki aptr ok sá er hann laut niðr. Þá mælir hann:

'Svínbeygt hefi ek nú þann er ríkastr er með Svíum.'

Svá skilðusk þeir. Af þessi sok er gull kallat sáð Kraka eða Fýrisvalla. Svá kvað Eyvindr skáldaspillir:

Skáldskaparmál

50 Orrosta er kolluð Hjaðninga veðr eða él ok vápn Hjaðninga eldar eða vendir, en saga er til þess. Konungr sá er Hogni er nefndr átti dóttur er Hildr hét. Hana tók at herfangi konungr sá er Heðinn hét Hjarrandason. Þá var Hogni konungr farinn í konunga stefnu. En er 5 hann spurði at herjat var í ríki hans ok dóttir hans var í braut tekin þá fór hann með sínu liði at leita Heðins ok spurði til hans at Heðinn hafði siglt norðr með landi. Þá er Hogni konungr kom í Nóreg spurði hann at Heðinn hafði siglt vestr of haf. Þá siglir Hogni eptir honum alt til Orkneyja, ok er hann kom þar sem heitir Háey þá var þar fyrir Heðinn með lið sitt. Þá fór Hildr á fund foður síns ok bauð honum men (at) sætt af hendi Heðins, en í oðru orði sagði hon at Heðinn væri búinn at berjask ok ætti Hogni af honum øngrar vægðar ván. Hogni svarar stirt dóttur sinni, en er hon hitti Heðin sagði hon honum at Hogni vildi ønga sætt ok bað hann búask til orrostu. Ok svá gera þeir hvárirtveggju, ganga upp á eyna ok fylkja liðinu. Þá kallar Heðinn á Hogna mág sinn ok bauð honum sætt ok mikit gull at bótum. Þá svarar Hogni:

'Of síð bauðtu þetta ef þú vill sættask, þvíat nú hefi ek dregit Dáinsleif er dvergarnir gerðu, er manns bani skal verða hvert sinn er bert er ok aldri bilar í hoggvi ok ekki sár grær ef þar skeinisk af.' Pá segir Heðinn: 'Sverði hælir þú þar en eigi sigri. Þat kalla ek gott hvert er dróttinholt er.'

Pá hófu þeir orrostu þá er Hjaðningavíg er kallat ok borðusk þann dag allan ok at kveldi fóru konungar til skipa. En Hildr gekk of nóttina til valsins ok vakði upp með fjolkyngi alla þá er dauðir váru. Ok annan dag gengu konungarnir á vígvollinn ok borðusk ok svá allir þeir er fellu hinn fyrra daginn. Fór svá sú orrosta hvern dag eptir annan at allir þeir er fellu ok oll vápn þau er lágu á vígvelli ok svá hlífar urðu at grjóti. En er dagaði stóðu upp allir dauðir menn ok borðusk ok oll vápn váru þá nýt. Svá er sagt í kvæðum at Hjaðningar skulu svá bíða ragnarøkrs. Eptir þessi sogu orti Bragi skáld í Ragna rskulu loðbrókar:

Ok *ofþerris *æða ósk-Rán at þat sínum til fárhuga færi feðr veðr *boga hugði, þá er hristi-Sif hringa háls *in bǫls of fylda

Rétt er ok um þann konung er undir honum eru skattkonungar at kalla hann konung konunga. Keisari er æztr konunga, en þar næst er konungr sá er ræðr fyrir þjóðlandi jafn í kenningum ǫllum hverr við annan í skáldskap. Þar næst eru þeir menn er jarlar heita eða skattkonungar, ok eru þeir jafnir í kenningum við konung nema eigi má þá kalla þjóðkonunga er skattkonungar eru. Ok svá kvað Arnórr 20 jarlaskáld of Þorfinn jarl:

(282) Nemi drótt hvé sjá sótti snarlyndr konungr jarla. Eigi þraut við ægi

25

Par næst eru í kenningum í skáldskap þeir menn er hersar heita. Kenna má þá sem konung eða jarl svá at kalla þá gullbrjóta ok auðmildinga ok merkismenn ok fólks stjóra eða kalla hann oddvita liðsins eða orrostu, fyrir því at þjóðkonungr hverr sá er ræðr morgum londum þá setr hann til landstjórnar með sér skattkonunga ok jarla at dæma lands log ok verja land fyrir ófriði í þeim londum er konungi liggja fjarri, ok skulu þeir dómar ok refsingar vera þar jafnréttir sem sjálfs konungs. Ok í einu landi eru mǫrg heruð ok er þat háttr konunga at setja þar réttara yfir svá mǫrg heruð sem hann gefr vald yfir ok heita þeir hersar eða lendir menn í Danskri tungu, en greifar í Saxlandi en barúnar í Englandi. Þeir skulu ok vera réttir dómarar ok réttir landvarnarmenn yfir því ríki er þeim er fengit til stjórnar. Ef eigi er konungr nær, þá skal fyrir þeim merki bera í orrostum ok eru þeir þá jafnréttir herstjórar sem konungar eða jarlar.

Par næst eru þeir menn er hǫlðar heita. Þat eru búendr þeir er gildir eru *at ættum ok réttum fullum. Þá má svá kenna at kalla þá veitanda fjár ok gætanda ok sætti manna. Þessar kenningar megu ok eiga hǫfðingjar. Konungar ok jarlar hafa til fylgðar með sér þá menn er hirðmenn heita ok húskarlar, en lendir menn hafa ok sér handgengna menn þá er í Danmǫrku ok í Svíþjóð eru hirðmenn *kallaðir, en í Nóregi húskarlar, ok sverja þeir þó eiða svá sem hirðmenn konungum. Húskarlar konunga váru mjǫk hirðmenn kallaðir í fornesk<j>u. Svá kvað Þorvaldr blǫnduskáld:

TEXTUAL NOTES

The spelling of manuscript readings is normalised in the same way as the text, except that when necessary the spelling of the manuscript is quoted in inverted commas and italics are used for the expansion of abbreviations.

- P. 1/1-2 No heading in RTW, but both R and W have a large ornamental capital E; T has a line space. U has the heading Frá heimboði Ása með Ægi. The name Skáldskapar mál appears in U in its heading to its first version of ch. 3 (SnE 1848-87, II 302) and the words Hér hefr (or hefir) mjok setning skáldskapar in its heading to ch. G57 (SnE 1848-87, II 295). Many words in the first few lines in R are unclear due to damage to the page. 9 'THor' R. 13 Par] P in margin R. 18 dal] perhaps dalinn (with -inn abbreviated by a horizontal stroke) R.
- P. 2/7 spurði hverr annan W, spyrr hverr þeira annan T. 8 út is supplied after gekk in SnE 1848–87,1212 and 1931, 80, but although there is a tear in the parchment and a space in the text, it is not certain that anything is missing. The word is not in the other MSS. 14 í (2) TW; 'o' R. 34 í] so apparently R; though it might be read á.
- P. 3/2 ef] repeated and the second time deleted R. 10 Hvaðan] large capital in R, W (ornamented in these two) and T, which also has the heading Frá Kvasi. 15 sínum TWU, sína R. 21 heita WU, heitu R (perhaps for hétu, see Introduction p. liv; abbreviated h. in T).
- P. 4/15 er written twice over page division R. 20 kvazk T, kvezk W, lézk U; kvað R. ráð TWU, ráðs R. 24 til Suttungs TWU. 35 lá hjá T, ljá hjá R, hvíldi hjá U, ljá W (omits hjá). 37 all R. 39 Suttungr TU, Þjazi RW.
- P. 5/2 þeir (abbreviated) TW, þú R. 6 'lut' (i. e. hlut) TW, lit R. 11 Large capital Þ in R, and space (2 lines) for one in W. 15 er TWB, eru R. 18 er TWB. 38 kǫlluðu] abbreviated kall with a stroke through -ll R.

GENERAL NOTES

- P. 1/2 In SnE 1848–87, I, ch. 1 of Skáldskaparmál begins at 5/9; 5/25–6/29 is placed immediately before, and entitled 'Eptirmáli' (Epilogue); and 1/2–5/8, entitled 'Bragaræður' ('the speeches of Bragi'), is made into a continuation of Gylfaginning (which is what it appears to be in U, which begins at 1/2 'Pessir Æsir'; cf. 20/18 n.), and given ch. nos 55–8 (here G55–8).
- P. 1/8 dómendr: it is not clear what they are going to be judges of in this episode, but the use of the word suggests that the conversation might have at some stage been conceived as a contest like that in Gylfaginning; cf. 42/19–20.
- P. 1/9–11 Baldr and Hoor are absent (though no reason is given), but Nanna is present, so this must be before the death of Baldr (cf. Gylf. 46/33), and thus before the events of Gylfaginning. Compare the list of Æsir in Gylf. 21–6 (which also includes Óðinn and twelve other Æsir including Baldr and Hoor, but omits Hænir).
- P. 1/31 This whole story corresponds closely with the account in Haustlong (verses 92–104 below), and there is verbal correpondence here with verse 98/8.
- P. 1/32 fætr: i. e. Loka (so TWU).
- P. 1/37 at sinni probably refers to the Æsir's journey home rather than to the conversation between Ægir and Bragi (i. e. it goes with ferð rather than $s\varrho g\eth$).
- P. 2/2–4 The narrator assumes knowledge of the account of Iðunn and her apples in Gylf. 25/23–8; it is odd that though the narrator here is her husband Bragi, there is no hint of the fact in his narration. It looks as though it was first compiled for a different speaker.
- P. 2/33 Though the description is not absolutely clear, it looks as though the author is implying that Loki was having oral intercourse with the goat. Bestiality would then be added to Loki's other sexual perversions.
- P. 3/6–7 felum í rúnum: cf. 3/9, 5/27, 109/19–20. On poetic language as concealment cf. Spearing 1987, 97.
- P. 3/35 bróðurson: probably an error for son (WU; W has Suttungr jotunn son Gillings).
- P. 5/9–24 The analysis of poetic diction in U (SnE 1848–87, II 296) is quite different, and contains some details similar to parts of ch. 31 below.

- P. 5/13 No question is asked here about hættir, and no explanation is given. Verse-forms are discussed in Háttatal, and the topic is clearly being reserved for there.
- P. 5/18 Second er redundant, though there are other examples of ok being used to introduce a main clause after a subordinate one; see Glossary under ok.
- P. 5/24 Since Snorri is discussing kennings which substitute the name of one god for the name of another it is clear that in this passage the element $-t\acute{y}r$ is to be understood as the name of the god Týr (i. e. the Týr of victory = Óðinn; the Týr of the chariot = Pórr). Nevertheless it is likely that in early poetry the element would have been understood to be the common noun $t\acute{y}r$ = god. See Glossary s. v. $t\acute{y}r$ and Index s. v. Týr.
- P. 5/25 It is difficult to say precisely what petta refers to. It may refer to what went before rather than to what follows (cf. Wessén 1940, 13).
- P. 5/32–5 Cf. the rather longer reference to the Prologue to Snorra Edda in B (SnE 1848–87, II 533; quoted in the Introduction, p. xlv above); von See 1988, 28–9, argues that i upphafi bókar could refer to the beginning of Gylfaginning rather than to the Prologue. But U omits the reference to the beginning of the book, B only mentions the contents of the Prologue, and RWT all continue 'er sagt er frá atburðum þeim er mannfólkit viltist frá réttri trú', which must refer to the Prologue. And anyway the reference of the rest of the sentence is more specifically to the last chapter of Gylfaginning.
- P. 5/36-6/29 Some details in this account correspond to Trójumanna saga (compare 6/23-7 with Trójumanna saga 1963, 209, 229, 236-8), but others are rather different (e. g. compare 6/3-12, 28-9 with Trójumanna saga 1963, 179-80, 237).
- P. 6/5–18: see Gylf. ch. 48 (cf. note to Gylf. 45/10).
- P. 6/25-7: cf. Vafþrúðnismál 51.
- P. 6/28 stór verk: perhaps a reference to the Aeneid and other accounts of Aeneas as founder of the Roman nation (e. g. those in Breta sogur, Hauksbók 1892–6, 231–302, especially p. 233).
- P. 6/32 hann: Óðinn (TUB). The text at 6/30 follows on from 5/24, although Reiðartýr is actually a name for Þórr. Cf. the pula of names for Óðinn in A and B, SnE 1848–87, II 472–3, 555–6.
- Verse 1 Skj A I 344, B I 316; verse 4 of Porfinnsdrápa, composed in honour of Earl Porfinnr of Orkney, probably soon after his death in 1064. Only in SnE. Other quotations from this poem are verses 290, 282 [= 344], 297, 384, 106, 298. See Fidjestøl 1982, 131–2, who points out that some of the verses Finnur Jónsson assigns to this poem could in fact be from Rognvaldsdrápa (see note to verse 114), especially verses 1, 290 and 384. Cf. also note to verse 105. There are also verses from Porfinnsdrápa quoted in Orkneyinga saga, Morkinskinna, Fagrskinna, Hulda–Hrokkinskinna, Hkr and ÓH.

- P. 6/37 foður is the regular gen. form of faðir both as a simplex and as a second element in a compound (spelled -r in R at 6/37). In compounds, however the nom. can be -foðr (6/32) and the gen. -foðrs or -foðr. See Noreen 1923, § 420 n. 2. The first element is spelled All- each time in R.
- Verse 2 Skj A I 191, B I 182; cf. NN 2256. Only in SnE; probably from a lausavísa, of which 13 others attributed to the same poet are quoted in Hávarðar saga Ísfirðings (cf. ÍF VI xcii).
- Verse 3 Skj A I 119–20, B I 114; also quoted as verse 226. The second half of the verse is quoted as verse 337. The whole verse appears as one of 11 lausavísur attributed to Víga-Glúmr in Víga-Glúms saga (ÍF IX 95) and is also in Landnámabók (Þórðarbók, see Skarðsárbók 1958, 114 n.); half of one of the others appears in Skáldskaparmál as verse 255; one (half-)stanza is also quoted in Reykdæla saga, ÍF X 234. For the narrative contexts of the two verses quoted in Skáldskaparmál see ÍF IX 95, 89.
- Verse 4 Skj A I 319, B I 295. On this poem see Frank 1978, 97–8. Thought to be from a poem in memory of Gizurr Gullbrá(rskáld), who fell at the battle of Stiklarstaðir in 1030; only in Snorra Edda. Verse 17 (also only in SnE) is taken to be from the same poem, and a third quotation is found in Hkr II 382 and ÓH 572. Quotations from at least four other poems by Refr are found as verses 30, 124, 126, 127, 214, 216, 234, 246, 264, 347, 354, 363, and in Háttatal after verse 8. A further couplet is attributed to him in Edda Magnúsar Ólafssonar (294 and 377). In Hkr II 358 and ÓH 543 Gizurr gullbrá is described as this poet's 'fóstri', which may mean that Refr was Gizurr's pupil (cf. verse 4/3–4: see Glossary under koma). Cf. Gizurr in Index. See also Landnámabók (ÍF I 100–01, 104–5), Eyrbyggja saga, Njáls saga. In line 2 alliteration falls on er, see NN 2070 D, 2338; Kuhn 1983, 116–20, 164–5, 173–4; and the a in skaldi has to be short to provide aðalhending (see Glossary under skáld).

Verse 5 Skj A I 69–70, B I 61; verse 11 of Háleygjatal. The reference is to Earl Sigurðr Hákonarson, who died in 962. Also in Hkr I 207, Fagrskinna 101, Flb I 67 (where the poem is called Háleygjadrápa); lines 5–8 also quoted as verse 278 and in TGT 27 and 103 (in W). Other verses of this poem are quoted as verses 33, 40, 23, 61, 220, 307. Further quotations appear in Hkr, Fagrskinna and Flb. The poem is largely a list of rulers, and clearly an imitation of Ynglingatal (hence perhaps Eyvindr's nickname), though less of it is preserved than of that poem; both use the metre kviðuháttr, cf. Háttatal 102. Háleygjatal was composed about 985 for Earl Hákon Sigurðarson and traced his ancestry back to Sæmingr son of Yngvi-Freyr, according to Snorri's Prologue to Hkr (I 4; ÓH 4; according to these sources Yngvi-Freyr (Ingunar-Freyr O(H) was son of Njorðr, like Freyr in the Prose Edda); but Sæmingr was son of Odinn according to the Prologue to Gylf., p. 6, and also Hkr I 21, where his mother is said to be Skaði. WTBU have the acc. in line 1, but the nom. is perhaps explicable as anacoluthon ('It was S. whom . . .'). It is the obj. of næmðu. Cf. Hkr I 206–7. Verse 6 Skj A I 78, B I 68; taken to belong to Glúmr's Gráfeldardrápa in memory of Haraldr gráfeldr of Norway who fell at Limfjorden in 970 (in spite of the appearance of Óðinn to aid a Christian king; see Fidjestøl 1982, 91, who thinks it somewhat doubtful whether this verse belongs in the poem). The striking idea that Óðinn was 'in' the king in battle is also commented on by Finnur Jónsson (1920–24, I 526). There are other quotations from Gráfeldardrápa in verses 32, 279 (uncertain according to Fidjestøl 1982, 91), 394 (= 279/1-2), 243 and in Hkr, OTM, Fagrskinna, TGT and Landnámabók. See Fidjestøl 1982, 230-33 for an appreciation of this poem. Glúmr Geirason appears in Landnámabók and a number of sagas of Icelanders, including Laxdæla saga and Reykdæla saga. Verse 7 Skj A I 64, B I 57; verse 1 of Hákonarmál, probably composed shortly after Hákon góði's death c. 961 (or perhaps a few years later, see Fidjestøl 1991, 124). Like the anonymous Eiríksmál (quoted in verse 20 below), of which it is evidently an imitation (cf. note to verse 5), it is one of the skaldic poems composed in eddic style and/or using mythological and legendary motifs that seem to have been in vogue in Norway in the tenth century (cf. also notes to verses 9 and 407, and see Fidjestøl 1982, 179-80; 1991; de Vries 1964-7, I 136-46; Háttatal pp. 83-4); the metre is a mixture of málaháttr and ljóðaháttr (Háttatal 95, 100). Further verses from the poem are quoted in verses 11 and 393, but most of the surviving poem, including this verse, appears in Hkr I 186–97 and Fagrskinna 86–95. Hákon was a Christian, but did not succeed in making his country Christian, and this poem celebrates him as one of Óðinn's heroes (cf. Gylf. 21, 32).

Verse 8 Skj A I 137, B I 129; from Húsdrápa, of which 11 verses are quoted in Skáldskaparmál: verses 39, 64, 54 (this verse is attributed to Bragi except in U), 210 (repeated as verse 316), 55 and 56, 63, 8, 14, 19, 242, 303; one further quotation (verse 4) is only in the redaction of the second part of Skáldskaparmál in W, SnE 1924, 112. The poem is not known from elsewhere, though its composition in honour of Óláfr pái is described in Laxdæla saga ch. 29 (ÍF V 80), where it is said that the descriptions in it were of scenes depicted on the panelling of Oláfr's house at Hjarðarholt in western Iceland (c. 985). The subjects in the poem are all mythological, and that quoted here is one of several devoted to the funeral of Baldr (Gylf. ch. 49); the other topics treated in the surviving verses are Heimdallr's conflict with Loki (see note to verse 64 below) and Þórr's fishing for the Midgard serpent (see Gylf. ch. 48). Cf. Turville-Petre 1976, 67-8. Lines 1-2 have the same aðalhending in each line, cf. Háttatal 24 and 47. There is a lausavísa attributed to Úlfr in Njáls saga (ÍF XII, 263), ÓTM II 158 and Kristni saga (1905, 23-4) in which he refuses to side with the heathens against the missionary Pangbrandr.

Verse 9 Probably by Porbjorn hornklofi, and from his poem Haralds-kvæði or Hrafnsmál (verse 12; the poem contains a dialogue between a valkyrie and a raven) rather than Þjóðólfr (several verses thought to be from this poem are ascribed to Þjóðólfr in manuscripts, see Jón Helgason 1962, 10–14); Skj A I 26, B I 24; lacking in B and T (which attributes verse 10 to Þjóðólfr instead), open space in U (though U has 8/12). There is another quotation from Haraldskvæði in Gylf. 7 (there also attributed to Þjóðólfr), but the majority of the surviving verses are found in Fagrskinna and some in Hkr, ÓTM and Haralds þáttr in Flb II 53–63. The poem is mostly in málaháttr (Háttatal 95) and much of it is about Haraldr hárfagri's most important victory, that at Hafrsfjorðr c. 885, but the poem as a whole may have been composed much later in Haraldr's reign. Cf. note to verse 7 and Fidjestøl 1982, 55–6.

Verse 10 Skj A I 155, B I 147. The number of scribal errors perhaps indicates that scribes had difficulty with the language of this verse; in line 4 bifkván 'trembling wife' is a possibility, but might be more applicable to Iceland (a volcanic country) than Norway, and it would not provide the expected hending. It is thought to be from Hákonardrápa, composed in honour of Earl Hákon Sigurðarson c. 990 (cf. Hallfreðar saga 151); on this poem see Fidjestøl 1982, 102–6 and Frank 1978, 85–6 (it could as well be about some other earl). All the surviving verses are found as quotations in Skáldskaparmál and nowhere else (verses 212, 248, 10, 121, 118 [= 291], 119, 288, 229, 230). The poem is marked by a series of images of the earl gaining the land of Norway as a husband gains or subdues a wife (Óðinn's wife Jorð); such sexual imagery is found in verses 10, 118-19, 121 too, and also in verses 122, 214, 304, 309, 311, 408 (cf. also verse 149). Another poem by Hallfrøðr is quoted in verse 397.

Verse 11 Skj A I 66–7, B I 59; verse 14 of Hákonarmál, also in Hkr I 195; see note to verse 7.

Verse 12 Skj A I 79, B I 69; also quoted as verse 308. Taken to be from Kormakr's Sigurðardrápa, composed c. 960 in honour of Earl Sigurðr Hákonarson, like the other quotations attributed to Kormakr in Skáldskaparmál (except for verse 360, see note): verses 292, 211, 241, 301, 21. Some of these verses may, however, be from a poem about his son Hákon (see notes to verses 292 and 301), and Fidjestøl (1982, 92-4) and Frank (1978, 117) question whether all the quotations are from the same poem; moreover Kormakr is said in Skáldatal (SnE III 274, 280) to have composed also for Haraldr gráfeldr. Apart from the quotations in Skáldskaparmál, the only other verse preserved from Sigurðardrápa is in Hkr I 168, which is the only source to give the name of the poem. The poem is distinguished by the forn minni (references to ancient myths or legends) inserted at the end of most quatrains (Háttatal 13, hjástælt). Kock (NN 2511; cf. 261) tries to take beitihún as 'baited bear', but the interpretation is forced and requires further emendation.

Verse 13 Skj A I 417, B I 387. This is all that survives of the poetry of Steinbórr, about whom nothing further is known. The lines seem to be the beginning of a poem, since they have the conventional reference to the poet's talent. Line 1: perhaps emend to

- forngervum?—hrósa usually takes the dative case and most manuscripts have litlum in line 4.
- Verse 14 Skj A I 138, B I 129; verse 9 of Húsdrápa, see note to verse 8. This verse is again about Baldr's funeral. Line 4 appears to be part of a stef (klofastef); the other part would have provided the subject of hlaut, presumably Óláfr pái's hall, and an object; see Glossary under hljóta.
- Verses 15–16 Skj A I 43, B I 37, ÍF II 255–6; verse 23–24/4 of Sonatorrek, Egill's poem about the loss of his sons. The whole poem is found in one independent manuscript only of Egils saga and may not have been in the original (see ÍF II 245). The 12 lines quoted here constitute the only quotation from the poem outside the saga. The comment after verse 16 indicates that the text of verse 15/3 ought to read guðjaðar; manuscripts of Egils saga mostly have goðs (or góðs) jaðar.
- Verse 17 Skj A I 319, B I 295. See note to verse 4. The verse-form is alhent (Háttatal 44) The poet seems to be expressing his gratitude to Óðinn for the gift of poetry. See Frank 1978, 97–8; Kuhn 1983, 305–6.
- Verse 18 Skj A I 123, B I 117. See Foote and Wilson 1970, 366. Verse 3 of Vellekla (the title is given in Hkr I and Egils saga). Other quotations in verses 27, 28, 25, 34, 35, 247, 306, 197, 227, 223, 334; many other verses are quoted in Hkr, Fagrskinna, ÓTM; one couplet in TGT. Verse 222 (attributed to 'Einarr') may also be from this poem. The poem was addressed to Earl Hákon Sigurðarson and composed c. 986. The title ('lack of gold') is probably an ironic hint that the poet expects reward.
- Verse 19 Skj A I 138, B I 129; verse 10 of Húsdrápa (see note to verse 8), again about Baldr's funeral.
- Verse 20 Skj A I 174, B I 164; verse 1 of the anonymous Eiríksmál on the death of Eiríkr blóðøx (died in England 954). Otherwise the poem survives only in Fagrskinna 77–9, where it states that it was commissioned by Eiríkr's queen Gunnhildr. Cf. note to verse 7. It is not clear why this verse should be included in this chapter, as the only reference to Óðinn is by his proper name, and there are no kennings of any kind. Line 10: perhaps read kæmi (as U and B; cf. blóta in Glossary and Introduction p. liii).
- Verse 21 Skj A I 80, B I 70; Frank 1978, 117–18; see note to verse 12. Allvaldr Yngva aldar 'he who has complete power over the people of Norway' is the kind of language more usually applied to a king, and is rather a flattering title for a jarl, even one as powerful as Sigurðr Hlaðajarl or Earl Hákon. See Yngvi in Index.

Verse 22 Skj A I 418, B I 388. Only known from here, and nothing further is known of the poet, whose name is given as Þórálfr in WB, as Porvaldr in U. His date is uncertain, and the context of the verse is obscure.

Verse 23 Skj A I 68, B I 60. This quotation, which is thought likely to be from Eyvindr's Háleygjatal (see note to verse 5), does not include a complete sentence, only a relative clause; the antecedent is probably (a kenning for) the mead of poetry, and the subject of the clause must be Óðinn (farmagnuðr), who, in the form of an eagle, bore the mead back to the gods from where it had been kept under a mountain by the giant Suttungr (pp. 4–5). The name Surtr must be a giant-name used as a common noun to refer to Suttungr, and may be part of a kenning for the mead of poetry rather than dependent on søkkdolum.

Verse 24 Skj A I 3, B I 3; from Bragi's Ragnarsdrápa, according to Snorri addressed to Ragnarr loðbrók, and evidently an expression of gratitude for the gift of a splendid shield, depictions of myths and legends on which are described in the poem. This poem, except for verse 13, which is quoted both in Gylf. ch. 1 and Hkr I 15, and verse 3, which is also in FoGT (see note to verse 154 below), is only preserved in SnE. Other quotations are found as verses 237, 238, 154–8, 250–54, 48, 42, 51, 153, 366, 110. See also notes to verses 54 and 150. The topics of the extant verses are the fall of Hamðir and Sǫrli (cf. Hamðismál), Hjaðningavíg (cf. ch. 50 on p. 72 above), Þórr fishing for the Midgard serpent (see Gylf. ch. 48), the death of the giant Þjazi and Gefjun's winning land from the Æsir (cf. Gylf. ch. 1). See Turville-Petre 1976, 1, and cf. Úlfr Uggason's Húsdrápa, see note to verse 8. This verse is about Þórr's fight with the Midgard serpent.

Verse 25 Skj A I 123, B I 117; from Einarr skálaglamm's Vellekla, see note to verse 18.

Verse 26 Skj A I 492, B I 464. Not known from elsewhere, but evidently from the end of a poem. Cf. note to verse 199.

P. 11/26: presumably a reference back to 3/10–5/8. In U another list (somewhat different from the one here) of kennings for poetry precedes ch. 2 (SnE 1848–87, II 302) which is compiled from 4/1-5 and 5/7-8, see Introduction p. xli. The list of names here (11/26-9) mixes accusatives and nominatives, though they are all objects of kalla; cf. note to 14/25-30.

Verses 27–8 Skj A I 122, B I 117; verses 1–2 of Vellekla, not found elsewhere, see note to verse 18. See Foote and Wilson 1970, 365–6. Verse 29 Skj A I 415, B I 385. Several verses are quoted in Skáldskaparmál from a poem attributed to Ormr Steinbórsson that seems to be in praise of a certain woman (the others are verses 38, 205, 207, 360). Apart from verse 205, the first couplet of which is also in TGT, this poem is not known from elsewhere, though there may be another verse in Edda Magnúsar Ólafssonar 397, see below. But it has been plausibly argued by Ólafur Halldórsson (1969) that the verses belong with the fragment said in Flb II 70 to be from Haraldr hárfagri's Snæfríðardrápa or Snjófríðardrápa (Skj A I 5) and that together they are part of a drápa by Ormr Steinbórsson addressed to an unknown woman. Verses 38, 207 and 360, as well as the verse in Flb, are probably from a mansongr, though verse 360 may be a stef. Nothing further is known about the poet, but he was probably composing in the latter part of the twelfth century (or maybe earlier, c. 1130, see below) and based his poem on a fairy-tale in which Haraldr hárfagri may have been a principal character. The story of Haraldr's love for Snæfríðr in Flb II 69–70 may be based on Ormr's drápa and give a better idea of its original content than the parallel version of the legend in Ágrip (ÍF XXIX 5-6; Driscoll 1995, 4-7). Two other fragments are attributed to Ormr, verse 138 and a half-stanza quoted in U at 84/18 (see notes to verses 138 and 303); a third is perhaps to be found in an anonymous verse in Edda Magnúsar Ólafssonar 397 (see Jón Helgason 1966, 177; Ólafur Halldórsson 1990, 230–32; Poole 1982, 126–32). If this verse also belongs to Snjófríðardrápa, it may give a hint as to the recipient (cf. Poole 1982, 128), and perhaps indicates a date of c. 1130, see Ólafur Halldórsson 1990, 231. The sentence quoted in verse 29 is incomplete; the whole of the half-verse (except the parenthesis) is an at-clause. The remainder of the sentence is not extant. It is perhaps more likely that the sentiment applies to the character in the story rather than to the poet (see Ólafur Halldórsson 1969, 155).

Verse 30 Skj A I 320, B I 296. One of four half-verses in SnE (and nowhere else) that seem to be from a poem by Refr about a certain Porsteinn, perhaps the son of Snorri goði mentioned in Landnámabók and Eyrbyggja saga; the other verses are Skáldskaparmál verses 216, 264 and Háttatal 8/34–7. Cf. note to verse 4 above.

Verse 31 Skj A I 35–6, B I 31. Part of verse 2 of Egill's Hofuðlausn, in praise of Eiríkr blóðøx; see Egils saga ch. 60. The poem is found in the Wolfenbüttel manuscript of Egils saga and in the fragment ε but is not in Möðruvallabók and so is unlikely to have been included in the original version of the saga (texts of the poem also appear in Worm 1636, 227–41, and in a transcript by Árni Magnússon). There are further quotations from the poem as verses 350, 319, 184.

Verse 32 Skj A I 75, B I 66. The opening stanza of Gráfeldardrápa, see note to verse 6 above; only found here. It confirms that the poem is a memorial poem, and to judge from the pl. mildinga in line 2 seems to be addressed to an assembly of rulers (or at least to more than one of the dead king's brothers; cf. verse 11 of the poem, Hkr I 243, and see Fidjestøl 1982, 230).

Verse 33 Skj A I 68, B I 60; verse 1 of Háleygjatal, see note to verse 5 above. The second half of the verse is also quoted as verse 40. Verse 34 Skj A I 123, B I 117; verse 5 of Vellekla, see note to verse 18 above. The syntax of this verse is uncertain: vágr is clearly the base-word in a kenning for poetry, and is the subject of eisar; Kock (NN 2916) takes aldrhafs as the determinant, rather than Rognis, which he takes with verk, though the kenning vágr aldrhafs would be unparalleled. It would surely require another determinant (Óðinn's) to be an acceptable kenning for poetry. If the determinant is taken to be Rognis this leaves aldrhafs (if taken as a single word) unattached; in NN 391 Kock takes the kenning alda Óðrøris ǫldrhafs as the subject of þýtr, leaving vágr unattached as subject of eisar. Verk Rognis aldrhafs might also be an acceptable kenning for poetry. Alternatively, aldr could be adverbial ('always'), and hafs has been taken as part of the kenning alda hafs Óðreris (so Reichardt 1928, 199, where verk is taken as absolute and Rognis with vágr), though it is unnecessary, since alda Óðreris is a complete kenning for poetry in itself (subject of þýtr við fles galdra; so NN 2916). It seems natural to take visa with fyrir, Rognis with verk (subj. of hagna) and mér with hagna, but if Rognis is required as the determinant in the kenning vágr Rognis, fyrir must go with mér and visa with verk, and hagna must be absolute.

- Verse 35 Skj A I 123, B I 117; verse 6 of Vellekla, see note to verse 18. Fley, if dat. as is to be expected after hlýði, ought to be fleyi, but possibly the -i is elided before j (cf. Noreen 1923, § 369 n.). Konráð Gíslason (1872, 13–14 (295–6)) suggests emending hlýði in line 3 to heyri, which takes the acc.
- Verse 36 Skj A I 148, B I 139; taken to be from an otherwise unknown poem about Earl Hákon Sigurðarson, since there appears to be a pun on his name (of kon mæran: ofljóst, cf. mærr in Glossary; compare the verse attributed to Queen Gunnhildr in Fagrskinna 75 and see NN 249). It may have been composed c. 990. Cf. Skáldatal (SnE 1848–87, III 280). Kock (NN 441) reads orða sáð oss grær á sefreinu Sónar (cf. Frank 1978, 96–7).
- Verse 37 Skj A I 98, B I 93. Together with verse 315, this is all that survives of the poetry of Volu-Steinn, which is only found in Snorra Edda. The verses seem to be fragments of a poem about his dead son Qgmundr addressed to his other son Egill (see Landnamabók, ÍF I 159–60, 184, 186; Finnur Jónsson 1920–24, I 510–11). On the attribution see Frank 1978, 95: Landnamabók 184 could be taken to mean that this verse was actually composed for Volu-Steinn by Gestr Oddleifsson (on whom see Gísla saga, Hávarðar saga, Laxdæla saga, Njáls saga).
- Verse 38 Skj A I 415, B I 385; see note to verse 29 above.
- Verse 39 Skj A I 136, B I 128; verse 1 of Húsdrápa, see note to verse 8 above. In SnE 1848–87, III 14, this verse is interpreted without emendation. Most commentators use the text of U (see t. n.), and in line 1 telk might be preferable to ték.
- P. 14/13: see verse 33/5-8.
- Verse 40 is lacking in TW. It has already been quoted in verse 33/5–8, see note to this verse.
- P. 14/18–20 A different explanation (and one this time involving word-play between lið (1) and líð, cf. p. 109/16–18) from the metaphorical one at 4/3–5, where the mead of poetry was the means by which the dwarfs obtained a passage to the shore; here the mead of poetry is simply the possession of the dwarfs, and is called ship because of the similarity of the words for vessel and strong drink. P. 14/19 lið heitir skip: cf. 109/16.
- Verse 41 Skj A I 183, B I 173. Anonymous; perhaps from a love-poem. According to 108/28, trollkvinna vindr can mean thought, and maybe giant's wind can too. See Glossary under bergjarl; ÍF II 251.

- P. 14/25–30 Note that in the lists of names here and elsewhere the nom. is sometimes used when grammatically the acc. would normally be required; some manuscripts (U and, in part, T) regularise the cases. Cf. also 11/26–9, 17/28–30, 18/15–16, 19/35–20/7, 39/1–2, 13–15, 40/27–31, 106/11–13. The variation in case perhaps implies that some lists were added to after being first written.
- P. 14/30 Verse 42 seems to be part of Bragi's instruction of Ægir, and thus he seems to be either quoting his own verse or that of his namesake the human poet. The distinction is perhaps implied by the use of the word skáld after Bragi's name (see Bragi (1) and (2) in Index).
- Verse 42 Skj A I 4, B I 4. Another verse from Ragnarsdrápa about Þórr's fight with the Midgard serpent; see note to verse 24. Kock, NN 219, takes at sandi with lá slakr and line 3 with rakðisk; cf. Turville-Petre 1976, 5.
- Verse 43 Skj A I 6, B I 6. This also seems to be from a poem about Pórr's fight with the Midgard serpent (Gylf. ch. 48). The only other verse surviving from Qlvir hnúfa is a lausavísa in Skáldasaga in Hauksbók (1892–6, 447). Sonr Jarðar may be subj. of æstisk (parallel to umgjǫrð) or the sentence may have continued in the following (lost) lines.
- Verse 44 Skj A I 152, B I 144. From Eilífr's Pórsdrápa, only known from SnE, and quoted in extenso as verses 73–91, see note to these verses. Another half-verse appears in verse 53. This one is placed by Finnur Jónsson at the end of the extant poem (Skj A I 152). Lines 1–2: the alliteration requires the archaic forms Vreiðr, Vrosku. Cf. verse 82: the last two lines of these two verses presumably form a stef. Cf. verses 36 and 268 and notes.
- Verses 45–7 Skj A I 140, B I 131. Also from a poem about Þórr's fight with the Midgard serpent (Gylf. ch. 48), and only preserved here. Nothing else by Eysteinn has been preserved, and he is not referred to elsewhere. Verse 45 is lacking in T.
- Verse 47 Finnur Jónsson's arrangement of the syntax (Skj B I 131) is very tortuous, and rendi must be emended to rendu if sýjur is the subj., cf. NN 421. It might be more natural to take brá viðr as impers. ('it came about') and seiðr jarðar as subj. of rendi fram (though actually seiðr could be the subj. of both verbs), and although renna usually has a dat. obj., it can take an acc. obj. with the sense of 'cause (something) to flow', though generally this - will then refer to pouring a liquid (see Fritzner 1886–96 under renna (nd) 3, 8; there are no unequivocal examples of the acc. under 8).

- Verse 48 Skj A I 3, B I 3. Another verse from Ragnarsdrápa about Pórr's fight with the Midgard serpent; see note to verse 24.
- Verse 49 Skj A I 140, B I 132. Also from a poem about Pórr's fight with the Midgard serpent (Gylf. ch. 48), and only preserved here. Part of another poem by Gamli is found as verse 401.
- Verse 50 Skj A I 144, B I 135. Together with verse 58, this seems to be part of a poem celebrating Þórr's victories over giants and giantesses. Verse 267, however, if it is by the same poet, must have been composed after his conversion to Christianity (cf. Eilífr Guðrúnarson). The poet is not referred to elsewhere.
- Verse 51 Skj A I 4, B I 4. Another verse from Ragnarsdrápa about Pórr's fight with the Midgard serpent; see note to verse 24.
- Verse 52 Skj A I 4, B I 4. Not found elsewhere. Since this verse seems to be addressed to Pórr, it may be from a separate poem about him, rather than from Ragnarsdrápa. Mærum simbli sumbls is taken to be a kenning for a giant, and the dat. to mean that Pórr is returning from an encounter with him (or of could be emended to af). A word simbil or simblir is unknown (symblir would be more plausible; 'the feaster of the feast'?); the word sumbl suggest a connection with the mead of poetry, though Pórr is not usually associated with that. On the interpretation given in the Glossary s. v. simblir see SnE 1952, 345.
- Verse 53 Skj A I 151, B I 143; Frank 1978, 112–13. Liðhent (Háttatal 41, cf. notes to verses 88/4 and 334 below). See notes to verses 44 and 73–91. This quatrain seems to belong in the poem between verses 87 and 88 below.
- Verse 54 Skj A I 137, B I 128. In spite of the attribution to Bragi, this is thought to be more likely part of Úlfr Uggason's Húsdrápa, see note to verse 8 (it is attributed to Úlfr Uggason here in U; both verse and attribution are lacking in T). It relates to the story told in Gylf. ch. 48, like several verses of Ragnarsdrápa, so the attribution in R and W is an understandable error.
- Verses 55–6 Skj A I 137, B I 129, there taken to be two halves of the same verse from $H\acute{u}sdr\acute{a}pa$ about Pórr's fight with the Midgard serpent (they are not separated in U, though the capital V is out in the margin at 17/9, as well as a $v = v\acute{i}sa$); see note to verse 8 and Frank 1978, 110–12. In verse 56 (and the prose comment at 17/13)

Pórr is referred to in terms of his opponents, the giants (cf. the Anglo-Saxon poem Beowulf, where both the hero and the monster Grendel are referred to as aglæca, and where the hero, like his opponent, fights without weapons; see Beowulf and the Fight at Finnsburg 1950, 298 under aglæca and lines 435–40 and note); cf. ch. 31 (40/15) where Snorri says it is inappropriate to refer to people in terms of giants unless one wants to be satirical. On the other hand terms for giant or troll (though more commonly those for giant-esses) can simply mean enemy or opponent or destroyer (e. g. 71/5 and verse 245; cf. Hveðra in Index and note to verse 68; Egils saga Skalla-Grímssonar verse 32, ÍF II 172; see also SnE 1931, 256/5–7, 257/7–10; Meissner 1921, 147–8; note to verses 451–62). Þórr can be seen as the opponent of the river Vimur (cf. 25/6–13, 15–18).

Verse 57 Skj A I 135, B I 127. A rare example of a verse addressed to Pórr (cf. verse 52): all the verbs are 2nd pers. sg. In verse 58, too, four of the verbs are 2nd pers. sg. Nothing more of Vetrliði's work is preserved, but see Njáls saga (ÍF XII 260–61) and Hkr I 320, where he appears as a determined opponent of Christianity; also Kristni saga, Landnámabók (ÍF I 348) and Egils saga Skalla-Grímssonar (ÍF II 59); and Finnur Jónsson 1920–24, I 471.

Verse 58 Skj A I 144, B I 135. See note to verse 50.

- P. $18/1 \ d\alpha mi$: a story giving the reason for something; a reference to Gylf. ch. 49.
- P. 18/3 On Njǫrðr's association with waggons see Turville-Petre 1964, 170–73; Wyatt and Cook 1993, xviii–xix.
- Verse 59 Skj A I 330, B I 303–4; 'vers rapportés'. Lines 1 and 5, 2 and 6, 3 and 7, 4 and 8 make up respectively four different independent sentences about mythology or legend. If sonar is emended to sona in line 1 (as in WT), there is not only a more perfect rhyme, but it accords better with other sources about Guðrún, who is said in e. g. Hamðismál 8 to have killed two of her sons (cf. p. 49 below). The verse is only known from here, and its context is unknown. It is in runhent (Háttatal 80–94). Cf. notes to verses 259 and 375.
- P. 18/14: a reference to Gylf. ch. 23.
- P. 18/15–16: alternation of nom. and acc. in R and W, though T and U have Van for Vanr. Cf. 14/25–30 n.
- Verse 60 Skj A I 46, B I 40; lacking in T and U as well as in B. Part of verse 17 of Arinbjarnarkviða (Arinbjorn's name is included in

- a pun, Grjótbjǫrn), which is preserved (incompletely legible) in Möðruvallabók, where it is written at the end of the text of Egils saga (in a different hand from the main text). The poem was probably not included in the saga originally. Four lines of verse 8 are also quoted in the redaction of the second half of Skáldskaparmál in W (SnE 1924, 112), and verses 15, 24 and 25 in TGT. The poem was composed in honour of the Norwegian nobleman Arinbjǫrn, celebrating Egill's friendship with him. See Egils saga Skalla-Grímssonar ch. 78.
- Verse 61 Skj A I 68, B I 60; the quotation consists only of a subordinate clause ('when . . .'). The context (and so the identity of the earls' enemy and the locality of útrǫst) is unknown, though the lines are probably part of Háleygjatal, see note to verse 5. Finnur Jónsson (Skj B 60) suggests that the subject may be bági Belja dólgs (Surtr?—see Gylf. 50/30) and that jarla goes with útrǫst.
- Verse 62 = Grímnismál 43. The only quotation in Skáldskaparmál from a mythological poem in the Codex Regius of the eddic poems except for the two quotations from Alvíssmál.
- Verse 63 Skj A I 137, B I 129. From Húsdrápa, about Baldr's funeral; see note to verse 8.
- P. 19/10 fyrr: cf. Gylf. ch. 27, where a verse from the poem mentioned at 19/12 is quoted. Mensækir Freyju: cf. 19/15, 20/3–4 and note and verse 64 n. On the theft of Brísingamen see Sǫrla þáttr (Flb I 304–5).
- P. 19/11 sverð is subj. Cf. 108/8–9 and note on p. 225.
- P. 19/18-19: cf. Gylf. ch. 34.
- P. 19/20–21 The title frumsmiðr bragar might be expected to apply to Bragi gamli the human poet (the earliest known in Scandinavia) rather than to the god; Óðinn is elsewhere credited with being the divine originator of poetry (3/10–5/8). Cf. Hávamál 105–7; Ynglinga saga ch. 6 (Hkr I 17); Sonatorrek 24 (ÍF II 256). If the god Bragi is still the speaker, as at the beginning of Skáldskaparmál, the statement is even odder (cf. notes to 2/2–4 and 14/30).
- P. 19/32 See Gylf. ch. 31. On Ullr's shield cf. 67/21 and note. 'Ullr's ship' is a kenning for shield (cf. Ullr in Index and see Meissner 1921, 166), but it is possible that Skjǫldr was the name of his ship, rather than that Ullr used a shield as a ship, since there is no story known to provide the origin for this idea. Cf. Turville-Petre 1964, 182, and Tolley 1996, 22–3 and 44 n. 53,

- where it is suggested that the reference is to the use of a shield as a means of transport (i. e. as a ski or skate, cf. ondur-Áss and Saxo Grammaticus 1979–80, I 79, II 58).
- P. 19/35–20/7 Note alternation between nom. and acc. in lists after kalla; cf. 11/26–9, 14/25–30 n. above.
- P. 20/1: cf. Gylf. ch. 34.
- P. 20/2 Áli is elsewhere in SnE said to be son of Óðinn (Gylf. 26; Skáldskaparmál verse 429; cf. Skáldskaparmál 6/20, 27), though he is not mentioned as a god in PE. In Gylf. 26 he is said to be the same as Váli. There appears to be a Váli son of Óðinn as well as a Váli son of Loki (Gylf. 49 and 53; Vafþrúðnismál 51, Voluspá 34), though the texts are not entirely certain (see Gylf. 177–8), and maybe Snorri took the names Váli and Áli to be alternatives for both persons, though they are listed separately in verse 429 (see Gylf. Index, Áli, Váli). The present passage can be punctuated to give various meanings: Loki may be called foður...Ála or Ála frænda ok foðurbróður; Ála frænda ok foður, bróður, sinna ok sessa Óðins; to call him either foðurbróður Ála or Óðins, or bróður Óðins is however problematical, though in Lokasenna 9 he claims to be Óðinn's sworn brother. The reading quoted in SnE 1848–87, I 268, giving Váli here instead of Áli in W, is wrong.
- P. 20/2–4 sinna ok sessa Óðins: cf. Lokasenna (note also rægjanda goðanna and other titles below); heimsæki ok kistuskrúð Geirrøðar: cf. ch. 18; þjófr jǫtna: i. e. one who steals from giants, e. g. in his stealing back of Iðunn, see below and cf. his theft of Sleipnir, Gylf. ch. 42; or maybe one who steals on behalf of giants, as in the theft of Iðunn's apples; þjófr hafrs: cf. Hymiskviða 37; þjófr Brísingamens: see note to 19/10 above and verse 64 below (Húsdrápa 2) and note; þjófr Iðunnar epla: see p. 2 above and verses 100–103 below (Haustlǫng, verses 9–11); Sleipnis frænda: see Gylf. ch. 42. As can be seen, several of these descriptions of Loki correspond to parts of Haustlǫng and Húsdrápa.
- P. 20/5 hárskaði Sifjar: cf. ch. 35.
- P. 20/6 ráðbani Baldrs, hinn bundni: cf. Gylf. chs 49–50. Þrætudólgr Heimdalar is a reference to the conflict described in verse 64 about which nothing further is known; but cf. Lokasenna 47–8. Þrætudólgr Skaða presumably refers to Lokasenna 49–52 and the concluding prose.

Verse 64 Skj A I 136–7, B I 128. From Húsdrápa, about the conflict

- between Loki and Heimdallr (cf. 19/10–11, 14–15; Turville-Petre 1964, 128–9). There is no more detailed version of this story extant; see 19/10 n. and verse 100. See note to verse 8.
- P. 20/18 Though it could be a reference to Gylf., and thus be intended as a supplement to it, it is perhaps more likely that this is just a continuation of (and a reference to) the narratives of the first four chapters of Skáldskaparmál. In either case it seems to mark the following passages as afterthoughts. In fact these stories in chs 17-18 have little to do with the origins of kennings and have not given rise to many of them (except for shield = Hrungnir's pedestal, see Meissner 1921, 166), and they contain few references to poetic diction. The references to Bragi and Ægir in them link them with those at the beginning of Skáldskaparmál, however, which is where they also appear in U (before ch. 2; in U Skáldskaparmál is marked as beginning after ch. 18), and this may have been the original arrangement. The frame may have been imposed on Skáldskaparmál later, though ch. 4 and many later chapters also begin with questions and answers, and Skáldskaparmál seems to have been conceived from the start as a dialogue. Cf. Introduction pp. xviii-xx.
- P. 20/31 Þórr's exploits as a drinker are referred to in Gylf. ch. 46. P. 21/24 ristubragð: a sign for cutting or carving (cf. rísta). Hrungnis (or Hrungners) hjarta is mentioned by Gísli Brynjúlfsson (1823, 141; see Blöndal 1920–24, 361), but it is doubtful whether his information is derived from a medieval source (other than Snorra Edda), since there is no other early mention of this sign.
- P. 22/32 One would expect $hof\delta i$; but cf. 22/2–3. Either the cases are being used inconsistently (cf. Fritzner 1886–96, II 194b, under i (1) β ; Cleasby and Vigfusson 1957, 316–17) or $hofu\delta$ is a rare example of an endingless dative (otherwise known for certain only in the word $g\delta z$, see Noreen 1923, § 361 n. 2).
- Verses 65–71 Skj A I 19–20, B I 17–18, Haustlong verses 14–20. Haustlong is a shield-poem (sér á baugi verse 65/1, 3–4, i. e. on the shield or shield-boss or its surround, cf. 67/22–4), cf. note to verse 24. It describes a shield given the poet by a certain Porleifr (thought to be inn spaki, son of Horða-Kári) c. 900 (or somewhat later if it was the same Porleifr who was involved in the setting up of the Alþingi in Iceland in 930; cf. Hkr I 90–91, 126–7, 163, 304; ÍF I 7 (cf. n. 5), 313; Ágrip and Fagrskinna); see verses 71/7–8, 92/4, 104/8. The poem is only preserved in SnE; there are further quotations as verses 92–104 and parts of these two passages are repeated in verses 341, 305, 108. The topics of the extant verses are the theft of Iðunn and the death of Þjazi (cf. 1/16–2/23 above), and Þórr's encounter with Hrungnir. See Turville-Petre 1976, 8–9.

Verse 65/3 hellis hyrjar borr is presumably a kenning for (generous) man, and probably vocative, since the rest of the sentence seems complete in sense; MS 'biar' clearly needs emending, and the tree-name borr is perhaps the most plausible (W has 'baur a' (Skj A I 19) or 'borua' (SnE 1924, 64; this looks the more likely reading), T 'maur á', but hellis hyrr is not a known kenning for gold, and the separation of á from baugi is unsatisfactory. Kock, NN 139, takes hellis bor = giant (acc.), á hyrjar baugi = on the shield (hyrr is a sword-name in verse 458/7; see NN 2722): 'also on the sword's circle can be seen how the terror of giants visited the cave-tree, the mound of Grjóttún.'

Verse 66/1–4 Kock (NN 140) takes (en) Ullar fyrir mági with line 3 rather than with lines 1 and 4 (or with both, cf. NN 1812?). Reichardt (1928, 161) and Finnur Jónsson (1924, 324) take en endilág with line 3 and knáttu ǫll Ullar fyrir mági with line 4 (cf. Skj B I 17).

Verse 67/2–3 Finnur Jónsson (Skj B I 17) reads bjorg hristusk ok berg brustu rather than berg hristusk ok bjorg brustu (cf. Reichardt 1928, 116); this perhaps links the nouns with more suitable predicates as well as being stylistically preferable in spite of making the word-order slightly more tortuous. Kock NN 141 reads line 3 as a complete sentence, in line 2 bjargsólgnum 'greedy for food' (or bergfólgnum 'rock-sheltered' NN 2506; bergs with dólgi, 'enemy in the mountain' NN 2409); in line 4 upphiminn with manna. Thus he makes lines 1–2, 3 and 4 three separate statements with bjargsólgnum dólgi the obj. of byrmðit and upphiminn manna the subj. of brann.

Verse 67/5–8 It is clear that the three words in line 6 together with vogna and vátt must be a kenning (or perhaps two kennings, see NN 226) for giant, acc. with frá ek, though the elements can be taken in various orders. Reichardt 1928, 102 reads myrkbeins Haka reinar vagna (or vagnar) váttr, watcher of whale(s) of dark bone of land of Haki (whales of cliffs = giants) as subj. of þátti. See váttr in Glossary.

Verse 68/5-8 Keeping hraundrengs as gen. dependent on trolls (varðat would then be impers., 'there was not long to wait') would give the kenning hraundrengs rúna trǫll (rock-gentleman's friend's enemy = Mjǫllnir) dependent on trjónu; hǫrðum would need to be emended to harðri (with trjónu) as suggested by Meissner 1921, 427. Although this gives a full rhyme in the odd line, it does make the meaning easier.

- Verse 71/1 áðr links with stóð eðr ólaus in verse 70, a rare example of a sentence continuing over the stanza-division. Cf. verses 81/1, 102/1; Háttatal 15. Line 3: though some whetstones are reddish in colour, it is likely that it rauða refers to blood.
- P. 24/17–19 The motivation for including these stories seems to be similar to that in Gylf:: they have little to do with poetic diction. Cf. 20/18 n. This is the last reference to Ægir and Bragi as speakers in Skáldskaparmál.
- P. 25/2 ljá can take either a gen. or acc. obj.; here the first of the three objects is gen. pl., the other two are acc. (in W and U the first two are gen.). Cf. 106/2–3 and afla in Glossary.
- Verse 72: evidently a quotation from an otherwise unknown eddic poem (PE 317).
- P. 25/27 Here U adds a further otherwise unknown verse, perhaps from the same poem (PE 318):

Þá kvað Þórr:

Einu «sinni» neytta ek alls me[gin]s jotna gorðum í þá er Gjálp ok Gneip dætr Geirraðar vildu hefja mik til himins.

Verses 73–91 Skj A I 148–151, B I 139–44. The only record of Pórsdrápa (apart from further quotations probably also from this poem in verses 44 and 53). It is the most detailed skaldic account of any of Pórr's exploits (all the extant verses are about his journey to and encounter with Geirrøðr), though the series of strange kennings, especially those for giants, suggests it is only partly serious. This use of kennings for giant that use words referring to human beings (cf. giant-kennings that use names of gods as base-words), which is one of the main effects in this poem, is an extension of the frequent use of self-contradictory images in kennings (cf. Háttatal 6/15–16 n.), but the result is rather comic. There may have been a stef (verse 44/3–4, verse 82/7–8), see note to verse 44. Eilífr also composed Christian verse (see verse 268 and cf. note to verse 50) as well as a poem about Earl Hákon (verse 36), but all that survives of his work is preserved in SnE only. See Finnur Jónsson 1900; Reichardt 1948.

Verse 73/1–2 DD interprets fellir fjornets flugstalla goða as 'tightener of the lifenet of the gods of precipitous altars', taking fjornet as a device for killing giants.

Verse 74/1 DD takes geðstrangrar with gongu, 'a journey strenuous to the spirit'; Finnur Jónsson (Skj B I 139) emends to geðstrangr, adjective with Pórr. Kock, NN 2502A, 2756D, reads geðstrangra as gen. pl. with gongu, 'of the determined ones'.

Verse 75/2 farmr meinsvárans arma looks like a kenning for Loki (meinsvárans with arma, referring to one of Loki's mates; or meins várans (vári 'defender'), whether or not sóknar hapts is part of it. Kock's meinsvarrans (harmful woman, i. e. Angrboða, NN 2106) is quite attractive. DD reads mein-Sváran (g)s as a term for a giant, the burden of whose arms is a giantess; farms gen. with for sóknar ('a journey of attack against'), and Hapt = Þjálfi (ofljóst, bjálfi m. = fetter) as the subject (though it is n.). Galdrs Rognir = Óðinn (NN 445) does not, however, fit well into the story, and DD takes it as a kenning for Loki. Kock also suggests (NN 2106) that sóknar hapts (i. e. Gunnarr (cf. Atlakviða) = gunnar 'battle', gen. sg.) goes with svipti sagna, meaning leader of the battle-crew, i. e. Pórr. Line 8 Endils á mó is taken by Kock (NN 1080) to mean 'on the sea, in the water (river)', and the subject of spendi (spendu) as gallópnis halla manntælir (-endr), 'the destroyer(s) of the men of the eagle's halls' (of the giants, i. e. Pórr and his companion).

Verse 76 Kock (NN 446) takes gunnvargs himintorgu as a kenning for giant, genitive of destination; and frumseyrir dreyra = Pórr as subject of kom til vers fríðrar fljóða. DD takes Gangr as the name of a giant, his vánir as hunting-grounds (acc. of route travelled with gengu, the subject of which would then be unexpressed), til vers gunnvargs fríðrar himintorgu as the destination ('to the fishing-haunt of the war-wolf of heaven's fair targe' (i. e. of the sun, the wolf of which means giant); and fljóða frumseyris kom dreyra as a separate statement, 'the women's first rank spill of blood came'.

Verse 78 Kock (NN 447) interprets 'there on the bottom before the meeting-keen son (bur) of Jorð (markar = earth) they set shoot-

- ing-snakes' net; the smooth round stones did not rest'. DD also takes i mork to mean 'into the ground', byr háf-markar 'storm of the fish-snare land'.
- Verse 79/1–4 Reichardt 1928, 8–9, 208 reads mar (for maðr) as obj. of leit, which is substituted for sér in line 1, as in Skj B I 141 (W and T have lét, see Introduction p. liv), and punctuates (gatat) mar njótr in neytri njarð- (ráð fyrir sér) -gjarðar, thus taking in neytri with njótr. Cf. in in Glossary.
- Verse 79/5–8 Kock's interpretation (NN 450) simplifies the syntax: 'The diminisher of Þorn's children (Þórr) said (lét instead of lætr) that unless the surge of Morn's blood diminished for him, his might would grow to the height of heaven (til svíra salþaks)'.
- Verse 80/1-4 Kock's suggestion that svarðrunnit fen is the object of óðu is attractive, but the rest of his interpretation is unconvincing (NN 451). Gunnar setr might, however, be a kenning for shield (see LP under setr). Kock adduces Voluspá 36, Á fellr . . . soxum ok sverðum, as a parallel to sverðrunnit fen (NN 2250). DD takes sverðrunnit ('knife-streaming') fen Fríðar ('liquid of the woman' = river) as the subject of flaut.
- Verse 80/5–8 Possibly 'Against the causer of trouble for the earth's swift runners (giants) surged a wave mightily blown by the storm of the áss of the earth's snowdrift (giant; see Áss in Index)', see NN 452. DD reads runkykva 'enliveners of the running stream', i. e. the giantesses causing the river to swell (cf. Reichardt 1948, 357: jarðar skafls hauðrs runkykva, 'enliveners of the flow of the land of the world of snow-drift'). Finnur Jónsson (Skj B I 141) emends to rúmbyggva (with áss hauðrs as a kenning for giants).
- Verse 81/1–4 Kock (NN 453) takes skaunar ýta sinni as governed by með, á seilhimin sjóla as 'on the lord's shield'. Reichardt 1928, 53 reads á skaunar seilhimin ('on the shield') and takes sjóla with aflraun (i. e. a test of strength for Þórr). Á seil skaunar himinsjóla might be better.
- Verse 81/7–8 fór stríðlundr með: stríðlundr is probably used as a virtual adverb, and fara með may have the sense of 'use s-thing (in a certain way)'. See með and stríðlundr in Glossary.
- Verse 82/1-4 Kock (NN 454) takes glamma stǫðvar dolgvamms firum as a kenning for giants, dat. with stríðkviðjundum; and djúpakarn as a word for heart. The last at any rate is better than Finnur Jónsson's tmesis (Skj B I 141; see djúp in Glossary).

Verse 82/5–6 arfi in RTW looks like the base-word of a kenning (for Pórr); if so, eiðs fjarðar ought to represent a description of Óðinn in the gen.; eiðs of fjarðs 'of one remote from, i. e. lacking regard for, his oath' (cf. Hávamál 110)? But this fails to rhyme. Possibly a kenning for Jǫrð (cf. NN 2502B)? Kock's suggestion that it is a kenning for Loki is improbable (NN 455). Lines 7–8 seem to be a stef; cf. verse 44 and note.

Verse 83/1–4 Kock (NN 456) takes sverðs sífuna (sword's continual flame, i. e. blade) with liðhatar; hlífar borðs Horðar as a kenning for warriors (i. e. in this context giants) and dyn harðgleipnis barða (noise of the hard fetter of the ship, i. e. of shields) as the kenning for battle. DD reads hlíðar for hlífar (which is probably unnecessary to the battle-kenning, which she takes as dyn barða harð-Gleipnis, din of the wolf of the shield, i. e. of the sword) as part of the kenning for giants (Horðar hlíðar borðs 'Horðalanders of the slope of the river-bank' (this is not one of the usual meanings of borð). RTW have -hattar in line 2, but this is probably just a spelling for -hatar, see Introduction p. liv. In lines 6-8 there seem to be two kennings for giants, one dependent on hrjóðendr, the other on við; if hrjóðendr governs fjoru þjóðar skytju (those who lay waste the refuge of the beach-people), skyld-Breta might be taken as also governing fjoru bjóðar (the Briton who is kin to the beach-people; cf. verse 78, where háf- seems to belong with both mork and markar). Kock (NN 457) reads hylriða fjoru (wolf's beach = desert) bjóðar as meaning 'of the giants' (gen. with hrjóðendr), and skjald-Breta skytju as meaning 'female defenders of shield-Britons', i. e. giantesses.

Verse 84/1–4 There seem to be three phrases that mean giants here. Kock changes með to fyr governing kneyfi dróttar dólg-Svíþjóðar kólgu and takes line 3 as a parenthesis, flesdrótt as the subj. of dreif í vá nesja: 'Because of the crusher of the troops of the wave of hostile Sweden (the giants)—the company took to flight—the rock-troop fled to the safety of the nesses' (NN 458). Reichardt (1928, 210) explains: Flesdrótt dreif fyr kneyfi Svíþjóðar dolgkolgu dróttar ('before the crusher of the band of the dangerous stream, i. e. of the giants'); ferð nesja sótti á flótta í vá. DD: 'At the approach of the oppressor of the hosts of the hostile Sweden of the icy wave, the rock-company fled; the troop of the headlands took to flight in danger.' It is better to take flesdrótt as subject of dreif í vá; Svíþjóðar kólgu with dróttar kneyfi; and the parenthesis as dólgferð nesja sótti á flótta; or flesdrótt as subject of dreif í vá, nesja with dróttar, and the parenthesis as dólgferð Svíþjóðar kólgu sótti á flótta.

Verse 84/5–8 In this half-verse there is a kenning for Pórr and one or perhaps two for giants. Kock (NN 459) takes fasta as a noun: 'When the flood-rib-Danes stood (facing, up to) the flame-shaker's (Þórr's) flame (fasti), the family of the Jólnir of the outlying sanctuary (the giants) had to give way'. DD takes fyrir funhristis fasta 'before the lightning of the fire-brandisher' with knáttu lúta. Verse 85 Kock's readings provide simpler syntax (see NN 460–61): 'Where among (i) the mighty (bróttar) lords (hersa) of the giant's dwelling (Pornranns) the ones gifted with courage went forward there was noise among the Cymri of the cave's round wall—the feller of peak-Lister reindeer (Þórr) was put into a fix—there was lack of peace there—on the dangerous grey (evil) hat of the wife of giants.' Greypan and grán (grár a. grey) ought to go with hott if possible. DD takes hugumbornir as the subject of the first sentence, and [við] hersa íþróttar Þornranns ('against the chiefs of the sport of Porn's cave') as (apparently) an accusative phrase indicating the destination after gingu. It might be preferable to read iþróttar with hugum and take Pornrann as acc. of the route. It is awkward to have i separated from Pornrann; cf. note to verse 65/3. Verse 86/1–4 Fylvingr as a sword-name in the bula (verse 457/1) may well be a deduction from this verse, cf. Falk 1914, 50, and thus cannot confirm that that was the original meaning. Fylvingar, he points out, means 'nuts' according to SnE 1848-87, II 430, 514, and here may be part of a kenning for 'heads'. Kock takes hám loga himni 'the high heaven of the fire, i. e. the roof' as dat. after brungu, and hallfylvingum vallar 'the field's leaning brown ones (rods)', i. e. walking-sticks, as instrumental. Lines 3-4: 'the spheres of the brow-sun (tungl brásólar, i. e. heads) pushed themselves there against the roof' (according to NN 462; cf. NN 2107: húmloga 'dark flame', tungls brásalir 'halls of the eyelash-moon'). DD reads bar in line 3, and brásalir as one word in line 4, so that the parenthetical statement becomes tungls brásalir tróðusk þar við tróði ('the halls of the eyelashes' moon', i. e. the giantesses' heads, 'were trodden down there under the roof', and the object of brungu is hám himni loga ('the ceiling'), the instrumental phrase

- hallvallar fylvingum 'with the swords of the stone-plain', i. e. walking-sticks.
- Verse 86/5–8 húfstjóri hreggs vafr-eiða 'controller of the hull of the stormy shifting necks of land, i. e. of the clouds' according to NN 463.
- Verse 87/1–4 Possibly 'The son of Earth began to learn the hateful one of the fjord-apple's (giant's) game—the men of Møre's bone (giants; reading leggs for legs) did not repress their merriment' (cf. NN 464, 1833). Kenna fræði does not, however, mean 'to learn a game'.
- Verse 88/4 síu langvinr R, langvinr síu WT; the latter order has the alliterating sound at the beginning of the line, where it should be. Lines 5–6: liðhent (but not quite like Háttatal 41: linked rhymes over the two lines, but not with alliteration falling on the same syllables as the rhymes; cf. notes to verses 53 and 334). See Frank 1978, 112–13.
- Verse 89/4 Kock (NN 2253) reads brasir (cf. Purnir in Index) veggjar ('wedge-stormer') as a kenning for Pórr (subject of kom); if this is what is meant, it may refer to the function of a hammer as a tool, though some words for thunderbolt also mean wedge. Cf. Motz 1997, 337–8.
- Verse 90/1-2 The expected hending is lacking in line 1. Emending $g\phi rva$ to gumna (or $gri\delta ja$) as gen. with gramr would provide one (see NN 466, 3056).
- Verse 90/3–4 salvanið-Synjar arinbauti = salvaniðbauti arin-Synjar, assumed to be a kenning for Þórr and the subject of the clause. This may be interpreted as double tmesis, or perhaps rather as interchange of the elements of the kenning. Cf. note to verse 255. But of would be better as a preposition with acc. than as the pleonastic adv., and the following words perhaps contain a kenning for giant or giantess; then the subj. must be understood from the preceding clause. In NN 467 it is suggested that Arinbauti may be a name for a giant, so that reading Arinbauta as gen. with salvaniðs would make a kenning for giant in general, whose Synjar (goddesses) are giantesses, acc. with of.
- Verse 90/5–8 Kock (NN 468) takes tvíviðar tívi and tollur karms as parallel kennings for Þórr (dat. with komat) and brautarliðs bekkfall as subject. In line 6 sá ought to be dat. too (Nygaard 1905, §§ 260, 264a); if er were omitted it could be a subj. pron. introducing an independent statement.

- Verse 91/5-6 Kock (NN 2254) points out that látrval-Rygir (látrs val-Rygir = val[s] látrs Rygir) would be a complete kenning for giants, and lista could be gen. pl. of list f. 'art' with liðfǫstum, 'mighty in skills'.
- P. 30/10 elja ('rival') here perhaps implies that only Frigg was Óðinn's 'proper' wife; the others were illicit unions, and the four were probably all taken to be with giantesses (cf. 30/18; but such an implication is clearly not present at 35/20 or verse 122/3; cf. 108/2). Gerðr is elsewhere mentioned only as having a union with Freyr, so that the name here may be an error for Gríðr mother of Viðarr (in U the name looks as though it has been altered from Rindar to Gríðar (actually 'geiðar', see facsimile II 56, 138), but Gerðar is written in the margin).
- P. 30/13–14 eigandi valfalls . . . ok fressa: see Gylf. ch. 24 and p. 47/3. P. 30/20 Understand kalla before eplin.
- P. 30/21 Another reference to Gylf. (25/29)? Or to the narrative at the beginning of Skáldskaparmál (2/1–23)?
- Verses 92–104 Skj A I 16–19, B I 14–17. Haustlong verses 1–13, see note to verses 65–71. They may be an interpolation: they are only in R, W (which, however, omits verse 102/6–104) and T (which omits verse 95), and though the poem was clearly known to Snorri, it may be that he did not intend to include the whole text in Skáldskaparmál. He may, however, have kept a written text of it with his work on Skáldskaparmál, and that may be how a scribe came to include it. The vocabulary of his prose account (1/16 ff.) corresponds to that of the verses, showing that Snorri knew the whole poem; e. g. the phrases leggja upp (1/28, verse 96/6–8); sígask (1/27, verse 95/6); cf. note to verse 98/8. Verse 93/1–4 is also quoted as verse 341, verse 94/1–4 as verse 305.

Verse 92/1 add at after gott? Finnur Jónsson (SnE 1931, 111; Skj A I 16) thought at was maybe written in R, as in W (which has góðs) and T. But it is perhaps not necessary: leggja gott gjǫldum gunnveggjar brú = provide something good as repayment for the shield? Kock (NN 157) points out that if the first two lines are made complete in sense (he suggests by emending brú to brag or orð; or hróðr NN 2985 D), lines 3–4 could be filled out with the stef from verses 71/7–8 and 104/7–8. Line 8: perhaps nets, as suggested by Kock (NN 1809), which also can be the base-word in a kenning for shield, see LP.

- Verse 93/1–4 = verse 341. Line 6: Kock (NN 135) suggests taking Gefnar (or ár-Gefnar) with mat, meaning the ox (cf. Prymskviða 24), leaving byrgitýr bjarga ('god of the rock-refuge') as a kenning for the giant. See also NN 2004 (reading árgnæfa mar 'steed of giants' = ox). Reichardt (1928, 163–4) takes árgefnar marr as a kenning for ox (ár-Gefn = Gefjun (ár 'fruitfulness'); cf. Gylf. ch. 1), comparing þrymseilar Várar hvalr (Skaði's whale = ox, see verse 96). Ingegerd Fries (1994), pointing out that the reading of R may in fact be mar rather than mat, suggests that ár gnæfa mar is Orion's horse = Taurus, i. e. ox.
- Verse 94/1–4 = verse 305. Kock, NN 1015, interprets lines 1–4: 'The ox (tólhreinn) was difficult to carve among the bones for the gods; Óðinn said there was something that caused it.'
- Verse 96/4 Kock (NN 137) points out that according to Edda Magnúsar Ólafssonar 266, prymseilar hvalr is a kenning for ox (whale of the mighty tackle?) and that Váru (so R, 'vorv') should therefore be taken separately, with pekkiligr ('dear to Vár').
- Verse 97/5 One might have expected the present subjunctive drepi (so R and T; 'drepi' W), but the metre demands a long vowel.
- Verse 98/8 has unusually close correspondence in wording with Snorri's prose account at 1/31.
- Verse 99/4 álfs, the apparent reading of R, would scarcely make sense; but foðr is perhaps a possible nom. form, see t. n. and cf. 6/37 n. Line 6: Kock (NN 3038) suggests þá nam to provide (a sort of) assonance with rúni.
- Verse 99/8 R's mildings might perhaps be a word referring to Óðinn, though málunautr mildings would then be an unusual way to refer to Þjazi; but there is perhaps a reference implied to ch. G56.
- Verse 100/1 sagna hrærir has been interpreted as 'starter of stories', i. e. Loki—an attractive but improbable idea (cf. Turville-Petre 1976, 10).
- Verse 101/5 Mættusk would give a hending.
- Verse 102/4 The repetition of ql-Gefnar looks like corruption. Cf. Kock's suggestion in NN 2721 (lund-allgegnir 'straightforward in character', of the gods; læva descriptive gen. with leiðiþír).
- Verse 102/6 The older form vreiðr would provide normal alliteration. Verse 102/7 The spelling 'mora' in R (and 'môra' in T) perhaps indicates the form mæra (cf. LP under mærr and mærr; ÁBM under mærr (3)). Lines 1 and 5 also have aðalhending.

Verse 104/1 Kock (NN 1811) emends skjótt to skof ('shavings') as subject of hófu brinna, with skopt as object of skófu. This also provides a skothending in line 1 (but in addition to the aðalhending). In NN 225 he had suggested taking skopt as subj. of hófu skjótt brinna and at the same time as obj. of en skófu ginnregin.

Verse 104/7-8 = verse 71/7-8 (stef). Cf. note to 92/1.

Verse 105 Skj A I 343, B I 315. Taken to be from Arnórr's Magnúsdrápa, composed about Magnús góði, and if this is correct the poem must have been composed after his death in 1046 or 1047; the verse may have been the last in the poem. The poem is also quoted in verses 213, 218, 352. Further substantial quotations from it are found in various versions of Kings' Sagas, particularly Hkr, ÓH, Hulda–Hrokkinskinna, Flb and Fagrskinna. Fidjestøl (1982, 130; see also 132) thought it uncertain that verse 105 really belonged to this poem; it has been taken to belong to Porfinnsdrápa (cf. note to verse 1). Kock (NN 806, 825) understands und gomlum Ymis hausi with pess var grams gnóg rausn.

Verse 106 Skj A I 348, B I 321. From Arnórr's Porfinnsdrápa, see note to verse 1. The lines also appear (twice) in Flb III 21 and 41 (Orkneyinga saga 83, 122) as the first half of a full stanza which goes on to say that these events will happen (i. e. the world will end) before a ruler finer than Porfinnr will be born in Orkney. The four lines here quoted are reminiscent of Voluspá 57.

Verse 107 Skj A I 505, B I 478. These lines are taken to be in fact from Boðvarr balti's Sigurðardrápa; they are attributed to Boðvarr balti in U, but to Arnórr in T and W (anonymous in both according to Fidjestøl 1982, 159, but T has ok enn sem hann [i. e. Arnórr] kvað, and though there is no explicit attribution in W, it looks as though there too they are taken to be by the same poet as the preceding verse); they are attributed to Kolli only in R and B. Sigurðardrápa was composed c. 1150 about King Sigurðr munnr Haraldsson, d. 1155. Other verses from the poem are found only in Morkinskinna. Boðvarr balti is listed as having composed about Sigurðr munnr in Skáldatal (SnE 1846–87, III 277).

Verse 108 Skj A I 19, B I 17. See verse 65/5–8 and note to verses 65–71. Note the variant in line 3.

Verse 109 Skj A I 143, B I 135. Only this quatrain and the couplet in verse 123 (perhaps from the same poem) are found of this poet's work; the contexts are unknown, though verse 109 may be

- about Óðinn (and perhaps refers to the poet's reception in Valhǫll or heaven). A saga Orms Barreyjarskálds with many verses is mentioned in Porgils saga ok Hafliða (Sturl. I 27) as having been recited at a wedding at Reykjahólar in 1119. Kock (NN 427) suggests that ramman spyr ek vísa and sá valdr ræðr fyrir veldi vagnbrautar should be taken as two independent (parenthetical) statements and that the subject of hvégi mér fagnar should be understood.
- Verse 110 Skj A I 4, B I 4. The quatrain consists only of a relative clause; the half-verse that contained the main clause is not extant. The antecedent should be Óðinn: the fragment is taken to be part of Ragnarsdrápa (see note to verse 24) and is evidently about the killing of Þjazi and Óðinn making his eyes into stars; cf. 2/36–7.
- Verse 111 Skj A I 445, B I 414. Taken to be from Eiríksdrápa, in memory of King Eiríkr inn góði Sveinsson of Denmark (d. 1103), like verses 398, 409, 391; cf. also 36/8. This verse may be a stef, see Fidjestøl 1982, 152–3. Most of the surviving poem, which is in the hrynhent metre (see Háttatal 62–4, cf. pp. 82–3), is preserved in Knýtlinga saga. Cf. notes to verses 270, 387 and 398.
- Verse 112 Skj A I 409, B I 379. Taken to be verse 1 of Steinn's Óláfsdrápa about King Óláfr kyrri, composed about 1070 (cf. Fidjestøl 1982, 147). More of the poem is found in Morkinskinna, Hulda-Hrokkinskinna and Flb; there are also some quotations in Hkr and Fagrskinna.
- Verse 113 Skj A I 343, B I 316. Assumed to be from a poem (otherwise unknown) about Gunnlaugr ormstunga's brother Hermundr Illugason, who died c. 1055 (see SnE 1848–87, III 568).
- Verse 114 Skj A I 332, B I 306. From Rognvaldsdrápa, on Earl Rognvaldr of Orkney after his death c. 1045. Verse 296 is also from this poem, and there is also a quotation in ÓH and in Orkneyinga saga (ÍF XXVII 440, XXXIV 54). See Fidjestøl 1982, 131–2 and note to verse 1.
- Verse 115 Skj A I 318, B I 294. The stef from Hallvarðr's Knútsdrápa (on Knútr inn ríki), only found here, from which there are further quotations (only found in Snorra Edda) in verses 258, 348, 311, 239, 388, and others in Knýtlinga saga and Hkr (and ÓH). This is the only work of his of which anything has survived. It is mainly about Knútr's expedition to England and his becoming king there in 1015–16.

- Verse 116 Skj A I 353, B I 326. The poem of which this is a fragment is otherwise unknown, though it might be from Hrynhenda (see note to verse 387). See Fidjestøl 1982, 128.
- Verse 117 Skj A I 73, B I 64. The second half of a lausavísa composed c. 965 (or somewhat later), after the fall of Hákon góði and the coming to power of the sons of Eiríkr blóðøx and Gunnhildr. The first half appears as verse 143, which is given twice in U, see SnE 1848–87, II 315, 319, 358. The whole stanza is also quoted in Hkr I 201, Fagrskinna 99–100 and ÓTM I 49. Nú: i. e. since Hákon's death wealth has been withheld. The parenthesis in lines 3–4 probably means 'the rulers' policies are having a great effect'. Cf. verses 185 and 249.
- Verses 118–19 Skj A I 155–6, B I 148. Verse 118 is also quoted as verse 291 with variants. Part of Hákonardrápa, see note to verse 10 (and Frank 1978, 85–6.) On bird-names used in kennings for ships (verse 119/3) see 'Den lille Skálda', SnE 1931, 255/4, and cf. Hrafn in Index and Glossary.
- P. 36/8 The first line of a verse is here used to refer to a quatrain (verse 111), as in modern usage. Cf. verse 357 n.
- Verse 120 Skj A I 376, B I 346. Taken to be part of Þjóðólfr Arnórsson's Sexstefja, composed in honour of Haraldr harðráði c. 1065, like verses 122, 385, 186, 389, 309, 318, 333, 236, 280. There are two further quotations in TGT, but the major part of the extant poem is preserved in Hkr (and OH), Fagrskinna, Morkinskinna, Hulda-Hrokkinskinna. It is an ambitious poem (the title implies it had six stef) covering many of Haraldr's exploits, including his part in the battle of Stiklarstaðir and his campaigns in the Mediterranean, as well as the major battles of his own reign. Fidjestøl (1982, 136) is however doubtful whether any of the verses that are only in Skáldskaparmál or TGT (i. e. verses 25 and 27–35 in Finnur Jónsson's arrangement of the poem in Skj; these include all the verses that are in Skáldskaparmál except verse 122, which is also in Fagrskinna and is less doubtful) are necessarily from Sexstefja, even though several of them are clearly about Haraldr harðráði, but he provisionally includes verses 25 and 35 (= verses 385 and 280 in Skáldskaparmál); cf. Fidjestøl 1982, 172. Some of these verses in Skáldskaparmál and TGT, however, share similarities which suggest that they form a group (Fidjestøl 1982, 142, 172).

- Verse 121 Skj A I 155, B I 147. See note to verse 10. Fleygjanda is incomplete as a kenning for ruler; Finnur Jónsson (Skj B I 147) emends frægjan to frakna ('of spears'; so also Frank 1978, 86).
- Verse 122 Skj A I 369, B I 339. The whole stanza is in Fagrskinna 231 and Hulda–Hrokkinskinna (Fms VI 140). See note to verse 120. The second half of the verse places it among Haraldr harðráði's campaigns in Africa, and the darrlatr dási is the king of Africa. Cf. Fidjestøl 1982, 40–41.
- P. 36/25–6 Note the different list of Ægir's daughters at 95/8–9 (Drǫfn instead of Bára; cf. also verse 357 and note). Both Drǫfn and Bára appear in verse 478, though there they are mixed with common nouns and it is difficult to be certain whether they are all ten to be taken as names. There is a further list (the same as at 95/8–9) in a verse in A, SnE 1848–87, II 493.
- P. 36/28 hringr eyjanna: cf. the verses of Einarr Skúlason and the bula of island-names in A, SnE 1848–87, II 491–2 (and Edda Magnúsar Ólafssonar 267–8).
- Verse 123 Skj A I 143, B I 135. See note to verse 109.
- Verse 124 Skj A I 320, B I 296. One of 5 fragments (the others as verses 126 and 347, 127, 354, 363) that seem to be from a travel poem, only known from Skáldskaparmál.
- Verse 125 Skj A I 418, B I 387. From a poem known as Norðrsetu-drápa (39/15), apparently about an expedition to somewhere to the northwest in Greenland. Other fragments in verse 137 and TGT 30, 113 (compare this with Húsdrápa 12, verse 303 below), 114. Nothing else is known of this poet.
- Verses 126–7 Skj A I 320, B I 296. Verse 126 is also quoted as verse 347. See note to verse 124.
- Verses 128–32, 134 Skj A I 481–2, B I 453. Fragments from an unknown poem or poems about a sea journey. Verses 346, 351, 357, 362 may also belong; perhaps also verse 339. Cf. Fidjestøl 1982, 207–8. If verse 128/4 is correctly emended to snægrund (so WTUB) and this means Iceland, it is difficult to see all these verses as belonging to an account of Sigurðr Jórsalafari's journey to Jerusalem; but some of them may. See Fidjestøl 1982, 156.
- Verse 133 Skj A I 211, B I 201. Only this verse and verse 289 are known of this poet's work. See Finnur Jónsson 1920–24, I 520 and Snæbjǫrn in Index. On the interpretation cf. Tolley 1995, 69–71. Kock (NN 572) interprets Grotti skerja as 'breakers'; Tolley

- 1995, 69 suggests 'whirlpool', and for brúðir eylúðrs 'brides of the island quern-frame', i. e. the waves, though brúðir eylúðrs skerja might be the kenning for waves and Grotta might on its own be a metaphor for the churning sea. In the second half of the verse Kock (NN 573) takes skipa hlíðar (the waves') lyngs as a description of the foam on the surface of the sea, gen. with líðmeldr. Skipa hliðar ból 'the dwelling of the ships' sides' would make a good kenning for sea (see Tolley 1995, 72 n.), but hlíðar is required by the metre; on hendings between vowels of different quantity see Háttatal p. 54). Cf. Saxo Grammaticus 1979–80, I 85 (and II 59 and 60), where it is implied that Amlóða meldr could mean sand.
- Verse 135 Skj A I 306, B I 284. A fragment of unknown context. An unusual example of nature poetry. Cf. note to verse 144.
- Verse 136 Skj A I 479, B I 451. A fragment of unknown context, evidently about a ruler, but the sentence is incomplete: the main clause must have been in the other half of the stanza. Cf. notes to verses 128–32, 145–9 and 233.
- P. 39/13–15 (ch. 27) and 18–19 (ch. 28): cf. 14/25–30 n. On Fornjótr see Holtsmark 1967, 73–4; Clunies Ross 1983. In Flb I 22 and Orkneyinga saga ch. 1 (İF XXXIV 3) the three sons of Fornjótr are Hlér (= Ægir, the sea), Logi (= fire) and Kári (a name for the wind; cf. ÁBM and the pula of veðra heiti in A, SnE 1848–87, II 486). See Fornjótr, Eldr, Logi and Vindr in Index. There is also a Kári in Hyndluljóð 19.
- Verse 137 Skj A I 418, B I 388. See note to verse 125.
- P. 39/18–19 With ch. 28 compare the pula of elds heiti in A and B, SnE 1848–87, II 486, 569–70.
- Verse 138 Skj A I 416, B I 386. A fragment of an unknown poem, to which the verse quoted in U only at 84/18 (see note to verse 303) may also belong. The lack of alliteration here implies that the two lines do not belong to the same couplet.
- Verse 139 Skj A I 540, B I 521. The only known fragment by this poet (taken to be the Ásgrímr Ketilsson of Sturl. I 166, 168, 203 and Skáldatal, cf. SnE 1848–87, III 646–8), which may be from a poem about King Sverrir composed c. 1200. See Fidjestøl 1982, 160.
- Verse 140 Skj A I 50, B I 43; Frank 1978, 147–9; Turville-Petre 1976, 19. From a lausavísa quoted in full in Egils saga ch. 47 (ÍF II 119). Cf. verse 392. The second half of this verse locates the event referred to at Lund, and according to the saga this would - have been before the Battle of Vínheiðr, i. e. in the mid 930s, but the verse is one of those thought by some not to be genuine. Cf. Háttatal 11: each couplet forms a separate sentence. Glitra can perhaps be taken as intrans., as it ought to be: 'we shall shine with our swords aloft.'

- P. 40/9 kalla . . . eða til: presumably to be understood kalla . . . eða kenna til (cf. t. n.). Alternatively omit eða til, but some of the genitives in the list are unsuitable as dependent on vinnanda eða fremjanda.
- P. 40/12 Like many of the suggestions in Snorra Edda about kennings originating in word-play, this explanation is unlikely to be correct (cf. p. 63/15–17 n.). Tree-names are used widely in kennings for both men and women and probably originally related to comparison of the shape of a tree with that of a human being. Cf. the pula of tree-names in A and B, SnE 1848–87, II 482–3, 566.
- P. 40/15 Cf. SnE 1931, 257/23–5; 1924, 105/35; and see Miðjungr in Index and LP; and Glossary under sómmiðjungr.
- P. $40/20 \ l\acute{a}g$ spelled 'log' in R (like $l\acute{o}g$ at 40/19; other manuscripts have $log\ (l\grave{o}g)$ or $lag\ (l\acute{a}g)$ in both cases). See 63/15-17 and note and $l\acute{o}g$ in Glossary.
- P. 40/21 Cf. the pula of tree-names in A and B, SnE 1848–87, II 482–3, 566.
- P. 40/27-31 Alternation of nom. and acc., cf. note to 14/25-30.
- P. 40/28 Cf. Gylf. 29/22.
- P. 40/32 fyrr: see the beginning of Skáldskaparmál. If the whole of Skáldskaparmál is supposed to be part of the dialogue beginning there, we have the illogicality of its including narratives of events that took place after the feast at which the dialogue took place had ended.
- P. 41/4 Understand váru after níu or eru nefndar after peira? Fyrr: see 36/25–6 and note.
- P. 41/9 In the kenning-type fire of the sea = gold, xgir was probably originally used as a common noun for sea, so that the story is unlikely to be the origin of the kenning, which most likely began with beliefs about gold being able to be found under water. Cf. Meissner 1921, 225; Faulkes 1994, 171.
- P. 41/15 Understand líkt after er (1) and er lík after áin and er líkr after lækr?
- Verse 141 Skj A I 4, B I 4–5. Only here; a fragment of unknown context, except that this also seems to be in response to a gift from

- a king. Line 4 fulli could be read fylli (fyllr f. 'a cupful'); see Introduction p. liv and NN 221.
- Verse 142: from an otherwise unknown eddic poem in ljóðaháttr (PE 318).
- P. 41/34 Cf. Gylf. ch. 43 and verse 62 above.
- P. 42/2–6 Cf. Hyndluljóð 7, where Freyja says that the dwarfs Dáinn and Nabbi made her a boar called Hilldisvíni. While her boar is not mentioned elsewhere, however, Freyr's appears also in Húsdrápa (verse 63 above) and at 18/27, and in Gylf. ch. 49.
- P. 42/3 Either understand hann before $t \alpha k i$ or the verb is impers.
- P. 42/10 Cf. Gylf. ch. 49; cf. note there to 47/4. There is another ring that can reproduce itself at 45/27–8 below.
- P. 42/15 Finnur Jónsson (SnE 1931, 123) emends at (1) to ok (so TWU), but as it stands it could either be an adverb with kom par or a relative.
- P. 42/18 veðjunina is written veðiū|na over the line division. The emendation may be unnecessary, since the first vowel of the article could perhaps sometimes be omitted in such forms (see Noreen 1923, § 472).
- P. 42/35 i serk sér: i. e. on a cord around his neck? If so, this remark may be related to the finds of small medieval representations of hammers designed to hang round the neck as amulets, e. g. those illustrated in Turville-Petre 1964, pl. 16–17. The shortness of the forskepti in the next sentence (q. v. in Glossary) is perhaps an allusion to Pórr's hammer having been perceived as similar to a Christian cross with a short top. This might well have been regarded as a lýti (flaw).
- Verse 143 Skj A I 73, B I 64. Quoted twice in U (see SnE 1848–87, II 319, 358). From a lausavísa also quoted in Hkr I 201, Fagrskinna 99–100, ÓTM I 49. The second half is quoted as verse 117, see note to that verse. In line 2, the uncontracted form bráa would give a sixth syllable, cf. Háttatal 7 and note. Similarly verses 77/8, 86/4, 147/8, 154/3, 228/1, 317/4, 359/2; perhaps also verse 77/4, though this line already has six syllables, and verse 214/2. See under á (2) in Glossary and Introduction p. liv; Noreen 1923, § 130.
- P. 43/17 fyrr: cf. Gylf. ch. 35, as well as p. 40/28 above and verse 435 below.
- Verse 144 Skj A I 306, B I 284. Taken to be from a poem on the poet's various exploits, including the Battle of Svolð (AD 999 or 1000), probably composed many years later (cf. Hkr I 358, verse 157/3 and note 2), perhaps c. 1020. Other quotations as verses 343, 338, 187; otherwise there survives only the one stanza in Hkr I 358, Fagrskinna 154 and other versions of the saga of Óláfr Tryggvason (including that of Oddr Snorrason); see ÓTM II 264 and Fidjestøl 1982, 166. There is another quotation from a poem by Skúli as verse 135. At þar várum is taken by Kock (NN 770) to be correlative with at fleiri ('the more, in that we were there'; perhaps an ironical reference to those who were not).

Verses 145–9 Skj A I 477–8, B I 449–50. These verses seem to be part of a poem thanking a king for the gift of an inlaid weapon (perhaps an axe; cf. Hnoss, Gersimi in Index); thus the wish for long life for the king in verse 146. Verse 146 is repeated as verse 232. Other verses probably from the same poem are verses 183, 193, 194, 244, 245 and possibly the anonymous verse in TGT 19, 80. On this poem see NN 2057. See Fidjestøl 1982, 156, who suggests that the poem may have been about a series of gifts and that verses 136 and 368 may have belonged to the same poem. Verse 147/8: cf. note to verse 143.

Verse 148/4 varn: unmutated form in R, as frequently in verse, for vqrn. Rhyme of a and q is not uncommon (see Hreinn Benediktsson 1963). Since this verse also seems to be about the gift of a weapon, it is tempting to follow Finnur Jónsson (Skj B I 450) and emend qll (spelled 'ávl' in R, 'avl' in W, 'avl' in U, 'aul' in T) to φx as subject of buðumk (with nýt) and vísa vqrn as the object ('a useful axe afforded me certain or secure protection'). Otherwise buðumk must be taken as 3rd sg. pass.

P. 44/29 fyrr: cf. 3/5–8.

Verse 150 Skj A I 5, B I 5. A fragment of an otherwise unknown poem, though since it seems to be praising a ruler for generosity it could be part of Ragnarsdrápa, see note to verse 24.

P. 45/1–2 The text seems to imply some hesitation (the redundant word steinninn is in RWT ('steininn' W), though not in U); vazt-(which belongs with undirkúlu) could perhaps be read vatns in the verse (cf. textual note) in spite of the prose.

Chs 39–43 are lacking in U here (SnE 1848–87, II 321), but the summary in U of kennings for gold derived from the stories in these chapters implies that the narratives were known to the compiler of the U redaction (so Boer 1924, 165–6, 192), unless the

- narratives are an expansion based on the list of kennings in U. The beginning (only) of the story of otrgjǫld and the Gjúkungar comes in U much later (SnE 1848–87, II 359–60).
- P. 45/32 fyrir því: with at; i. e. Loki would repeat the curse to whoever next took possession of the ring; maybe implying that he would take malicious pleasure in passing on the curse.

Verses $151-2 = F \acute{a} f n i s m \acute{a} l \ 32-3$.

- P. 49/31 lét has no complement in R, leaving the construction incomplete (anacoluthon); þá riðu þeir in line 33 could be regarded as the virtual complement, or read leit instead of lét (there are other examples of e instead of ei in R, see Introduction, p. liv), and either regard en Svanhildr drottning sat as the implied object (leit abs.), or read hvar Svanhildr drottning sat. T has þá leit Jormunrekr konungr Svanhildi . . . hvar hon sat. The whole sentence is rephrased in C.
- Verse 153 Skj A I 4, B I 4. Taken to be from Ragnarsdrápa, about Pórr's fishing for the Midgard serpent (see note to verse 24).
- Verses 154–8 Skj A I 1–2, B I 1–2. See note to verse 24; this is evidently the section of the poem that corresponds in content to Hamðismál. See von See 1981, 233–6. Verse 154 is also in FoGT 129; on verses 154–7 see Turville-Petre 1976, 1–4.
- Verse 155 Cf. Dronke 1969, 205–6. Qlskakki runna is perhaps the equivalent of skakki qlrunna: 'generous giver (one who pours out) to ale-trees' (which then includes a complete kenning for men, cf. runnr in Glossary). Line 8: the form haufði (Noreen 1923, § 98.1) provides aðalhending, though rhymes are not regular in this poem anyway; cf. Gylf. 7/19, Hkr I 15.
- Verse 156/3–4: explained as naglfara siglur (masts of the sword = warriors) standa andvanar saums segls (without sails of the rivets = shields) in NN 2720. Edith Marold (1994, 575) suggests naglfara means ship or ship's planking (see Index), and that the kenning is 'masts of the sails of the ship's planking (i. e. of shields), which do not have nails', i. e. warriors (cf. note to verse 401). Cf. von See 1981, 233–4.
- Verse 157/5-8 Cf. Reichardt 1928, 23-4.
- Verse 158/4 Hendiadys: 'shield and (i. e. with) with many stories'; cf. 157/7 ('forehead- and edge-blows') and NN 2002.
- Verses 159–82 Grottasongr, an eddic-type poem, but only found here (in R and T; verse 1 only in C, in the middle of the preceding

- prose (52/14), introduced by the words ok er þetta upphaf at; C and U also omit verses 183–4). Apparently a literary reworking of what may originally have been an actual work-song.
- Verse 161/3–4 The proposal may be to stop grinding rather than to start. Verse 165/3–4: Kock suggests reading Sofið eigi síðar en . . . eða lengr en svá . . . (NN 71).
- Verse 167/8 late alliteration; change word-order to bornar erum beim? See also verse 176/6, where T reads vill hlýða.
- Verse 183 Skj A I 478, B I 450. See note to verses 145–9. Line 7: Kock (NN 958) takes fé Fenju as the subject of dýrkar, leaving pann meldr as an expression for gold on its own as the object of bera.
- Verse 184 Skj A I 39, B I 33. Hofuðlausn 17/7–8, see note to verse 31.
- P. 58/11 heyrðak: archaic suffixation of first person pronoun, perhaps to indicate provincial speech?—though such a form may not yet have seemed archaic at the time Snorri was writing.
- P. 58/12 mestr: deliberate play on the two meanings of the word ('tallest, largest in build' and 'greatest in reputation or achievement').
- P. 59/15 and 17: perhaps these two speeches are lines of verse.
- P. 59/32 Cf. the bula of sáðs heiti in A, SnE 1848–87, II 493.
- Verse 185 Skj A I 73, B I 64. Appears twice in U, SnE 1848–87, II 321, 362. Part of a lausavisa the whole of which appears in Hkr I 201 (see note there on p. 200) alongside verses 117 and 143 above (which are given in Hkr as the two halves of a single stanza; see note to verse 117 above). Also in Fagrskinna 19, ÓTM I 49, and lines 1–2 in TGT 16, 71. (See Frank 1978, 82–3, and Ullr in Index.)
- Verse 186 Skj A I 375, B I 345. Lines 5–6 also quoted as verse 389. See note to verse 120. Fidjestøl (1982, 137–9) suggests brattakr vala (so WTU) spakra should be taken as '(on) the steep field of the quietly resting falcons (i. e. arm(s))', with bauga emended to bjúgri (a. with orð).
- Verse 187 Skj A I 306, B I 284. See note to verse 144.
- Verses 188–90 Skj A I 181, B I 170–71. Only fragments survive of the eddic poem Bjarkamál in fornu, one of the few such poems known that had Danish content. Besides these three verses, there are two quoted from the beginning of the poem in Hkr II 361–2 and ÓH 547 (cf. Fóstbræðra saga, ÍF VI 261–3), and two fragments of four and two lines respectively in Edda Magnúsar Ólafssonar 265, 272. But Saxo Grammaticus includes a Latin version - of the poem in Book 2 (1979–80, I 56–63, cf. II 57). The original poem is thought to have been from the tenth century, though all the lines attributed to it may not be original. Boðvarr bjarki was one of the principal speakers in the poem (hence its name), and the subject of the verses quoted here was presumably Hrólfr kraki. The poem relates to the king's last battle.

- Verse 190/8: Baldr þogli is not known and Baldr may be part of a kenning for warrior; vakði (vakti)... þeygi (WTAU) suggest that the line has something to do with the episode of the apparently inactive Boðvarr in the last battle of Hrólfr kraki (Hrólfs saga kraka 1960, 118; Saxo Grammaticus 1979–80, I 59–60).
- P. 61/11–12 It seems natural to assume that snow and ice in kennings would refer only to silver (cf. verse 193 and note to 62/9), but cf. 'Den lille Skálda', SnE 1931, 256/22.
- P. 61/16 eru: i. e. can be (referred to as, taken as); but it is not clear which is the subj. and which the complement, cf. 61/14 and Glossary under vera).
- Verse 191 Skj A I 399, B I 368. Taken to be from Porleikr fagri's flokkr on King Sveinn Úlfsson, composed c. 1051 (see Hkr III 113, Knýtlinga saga 130, Fagrskinna 253, Morkinskinna 161), like the fragment in verse 198 and verse 361, where the poet's name is again given as Porleifr in RC, but Porleikr in TAB (U omits the chapter). Here TCU give the name as Porleifr, though it is Porleikr in WAB; at verse 198 only T has Porleifr (U has Porleikr there); see Index. There are further quotations from the poem in Knýtlinga saga and Hkr, Fagrskinna, Morkinskinna, Hulda–Hrokkinskinna.
- Verse 192 Skj A I 122, B I 116. Together with verse 299 thought to be all that remains of a poem about a king who must have been Danish (in view of the mention of Lundr here and his being said to be of the kin of Haraldr hilditonn in verse 299); it was possibly Haraldr blátonn, and the poem may have been composed c. 985. See Fidjestøl 1982, 96.
- Verses 193–4 Skj A I 478–9, B I 450–51. See note to verses 145–9. With the word-order of verse 193 (sjóðs goes with snær and geima with eldr; both phrases are the subject of liggr) compare Háttatal 98. Snær ok eldr in line 4 constitute refhvarfa bróðir (Háttatal 23), as well as paradox.
- P. 62/9 The sentence is fuller in AB: Hér er gull kallat eldr áls (B omits) hrynbrautar, en silfr snær skálanna (SnE 1848–87, II 433 (the text here omits the word silfr, but it is in the manuscript), 517). Cf. 61/11-12 n.

Verse 195 Skj A I 419, B I 388. Part of an otherwise unknown poem by an otherwise unknown poet, probably in praise of some ruler. There seem to be two nominatives in apposition as the subj. of átti, both referring to the same person as seima rýri; glaðsendir, however, could be the subject of sér (though it would seem unlikely to refer to the poet; cf. verse 197 n.), or perhaps, if sér is impers., vocative (see Skj B I 388). Some manuscripts have at for ok in line 2, see under ok in Glossary.

Verse 196 Skj A I 290, B I 268. Quoted again as verse 287, with differences. Taken to be from Óttarr's head-ransom poem addressed to King Óláfr Haraldsson of Norway (c. 1022), see Hkr II 5 n. (the context of the poem is given by Styrmir fróði, Flb IV 6–7). Further quotations as verses 359 and 408 and in FGT, but most of the surviving poem is found in Hkr and ÓH (some brief quotations also in Fagrskinna, Orkneyinga saga, Knýtlinga saga, Legendary saga, etc.). Whether reading gull- (WTUB), gulls (RC) or glóð- (with A and verse 287), the kenning gunnar gull(s) (glóð-)brjótandi can only mean 'sword-breaker'; if the lines are not wrongly copied, the commentator must have overlooked the fact that there is not here a kenning of the type gold-breaker = generous man (62/14; cf. verse 228 n.).

Verse 197 Skj A I 130, B I 123. From Vellekla, see note to verse 18. Kock's interpretation (NN 410) avoids giving the poet the inappropriate kenning gullsendir (see Faulkes 1993b, 17–18; cf. verse 195 n.), but makes him the receiver of land as a gift (improbable though not impossible) and describes him as receiver (i. e. of the mead of poetry) rather than maker of poetry (cf. Gauts gjafrotuðr in verse 300b).

Verse 198 Skj A I 399, B I 368. See note to verse 191.

Verse 199 Skj A I 492, B I 464. Together with verse 283, this is all that remains of a poem presumed, because of the mention in Skáldatal (SnE 1848–87, III 276) of the poet having composed about him, to have been about Sigurðr Jórsalafari (d. 1130). These and verse 26 are all that remains of this poet's work. Finnur Jónsson (1920–24, II 72) suggests the possibility that the nickname is derived from his having composed a poem (from which verse 26 may come) about someone with the nickname blanda (perhaps the Norwegian Brynjólfr blanda, d. c. 1180; see Sverris saga 51). See Fidjestøl 1982. 158.

Verse 200 Skj A I 324, B I 299. Thought to be the last verse of Pórarinn loftunga's Tøgdrápa (the poet is named in A), composed for Knútr inn ríki c. 1028, otherwise known only from quotations in Knýtlinga saga, Fagrskinna, Hkr, ÓH, Legendary saga and other versions of Óláfs saga helga. See ÍF XXXV 125–6. The word tøgdrápa may be used as a common noun here (for the first time?), but subsequently it has come to be taken as the name of Pórarinn's poem. This may have been the first major poem to use this metre (tøg(drápu)lag is given as the name of the metre in Háttatal 68–9; tøgdrápuháttr in Háttatal 70), but it is uncertain whether the name relates to the metre or to the subject of the poem (Knútr's journeys or expeditions to Norway). Cf. tøgdrápa in Glossary.

Verse 201 Skj A I 552, B I 534. From a poem about an unknown woman which is also quoted in verses 203 and 204 and TGT 21, 85. Besides the poem quoted here Hallar-Steinn composed Rekstefja (preserved in Bergsbók (see note to verse 277) and ÓTM) about Óláfr Tryggvason and there survive fragments of a poem thought to be perhaps about Skáld-Helgi in Edda Magnúsar Ólafssonar 307, 398 (see Finnur Jónsson 1920–24, II 106–7).

P. 63/13 kallat: written thus without abbreviation in RWT; such lack of concord is not unusual when the participle precedes the subject (Nygaard 1905, § 66 n. 3; § 67 n. 2, 3). U and C have kallaðir. Cf. 67/23.

P. 63/15–17 samheiti: homonym; i. e. selja can be a word for a tree (a kind of willow) as well as a word meaning dealer, server, giver. Fyrr: i. e. ch. 31. Lóg is written 'lág' at 63/16 and lág is written 'log' at 63/17 (in R; the other manuscripts generally have a (or á) in both words, though T has o; at 40/19–20 R and T have log, W has log (the first time with ô), U and B lag or lág). The play is on the two words lóg and lág (lóg) which would have been distinct in pronunciation but could both be written log or log (see lág and lóg in Glossary). Cf. 40/19–20 and note. The explanation Snorri gives is improbable, cf. note to 40/12. On lág in kennings for woman cf. skorða, tróða; all three are likely to be variations of kennings with names of trees as base-words.

P. 63/16 Cf. 40/21 and note.

Verse 202 Skj A I 197, B I 188. From a lausavísa in Gunnlaugs saga

- ch. 11 (\acute{IF} III 96), about Helga in fagra after her marriage to Hrafn (c. 1006), though it is doubtful whether it is genuine. The man referred to in line 2 is Helga's father, Porsteinn Egilsson.
- Verses 203–4 Skj A I 552–3, B I 534. See note to verse 201.
- Verse 205 Skj A I 415, B I 385. See note to verse 29. Lines 1–2 are quoted in TGT (in W) 28, 104. This verse seems to refer to what was done with Snæfríðr's dead body.
- Verse 206 Skj A I 417, B I 386. Apparently a fragment of a poem about an unknown woman; nothing further is known of this poet (called Steinn in A and T). Alliteration on the second half of a compound as in line 3 is unusual (cf. Kuhn 1983, 34, 49, 108), but although stoð straumtungls would be a sufficient kenning, velti (vélti?) will not fit in as a verb without hofu- being omitted (cf. NN 2314: mik villti stoð stilltan). The line is anyway rather heavy.
- Verse 207 Skj A I 416, B I 385. See note to verse 29. Ek hefi lagit mark (konunnar) á (kvæði) may mean simply 'I have dedicated the poem to the woman' rather than 'I have fixed the image of the woman in the poem'.
- Verse 208 Skj A I 185, B I 175. Anonymous fragment of an otherwise unknown love poem. It is doubtful whether Finnur Jónsson is right to class it as tenth century in Skj A I 185 (see Finnur Jónsson 1920–24, I 522).
- Verse 209 Skj A I 184, B I 174. Anonymous fragment of an otherwise unknown poem. Cf. verses 224–5, 235, 317 and Fidjestøl 1982, 167.
- P. 64/26 reynir: play on reynir 'trier' (cf. reyna 'try, test') and reynir 'rowan'; cf. ch. 31. It is more likely that in fact tree-names were used in kennings because of the similarity in appearance between a man and a tree. Cf. selja (2) and (3), and lág, lóg in Glossary, and notes to 40/12 and 63/15–17.
- Verse 210 Skj A I 137, B I 129. Another verse about Pórr fishing for the Midgard serpent (see note to verse 8), also quoted as verse 316.
- Verse 211 Skj A I 79, B I 69. From Sigurðardrápa, see note to verse 12.
- Verse 212 Skj A I 155, B I 147. From Hákonardrápa, see note to verse 10.
- Verse 213 Skj A I 341, B I 314. Second half of verse 12 of Magnúsdrápa, see note to verse 105. The complete stanza is quoted in Hkr III 56–7, Fagrskinna 224, Hulda–Hrokkinskinna (Fms VI 83), the first half in Flb IV 53.
- Verse 214 Skj A I 321, B I 297. A fragment of unknown context, see note to verse 4. Finnur Jónsson 1920–24, I 600, suggests that it relates to Vagn Ákason, cf. Jómsvíkinga saga 1962, 29, 42–3. In line 4, R appears to have es-Freyr, though it perhaps could be read él-Freyr, which would be synonymous with as-Freyr. The phrase gekk í meyjar sæing may be metaphorical if the woman concerned is symbolic (e. g. of death (= Hel) or battle (= Hildr (1) in Index), cf. Háttatal 49 and note). Kock (NN 1128) takes Hárs drífu askr as subject of gekk (parallel to él-Freyr) and við as a preposition with ærinn þroska (rather than present tense of vinna), though við would not normally be used with this meaning; cf. NN 2988H.

Verse 215 Skj A I 601, B I 601. Anonymous and of unknown context. If brynja is the subject of kvaddi, handar svella hlynr is vocative; it is sometimes emended to brynju, making hlynr the subject. (Kock NN 3132 points out that then heill ought to be feminine.) The remainder of the verse is not extant, and brynja may belong in sense to something in the following lines.

Verse 216 Skj A I 320, B I 296. See note to verse 30. Lines 1 and 3–4 do not comprise a complete sentence, and the main clause must have been in the other half of the stanza.

Verse 217 Skj A I 298, B I 275. From Knútsdrápa, addressed to Knútr inn ríki c. 1027; also quoted as verse 314; the whole stanza of which this is the second half appears in Hkr II 280–1, ÓH 438 and the Legendary saga; the first half only in Fagrskinna 186. It is about the battle at Áin helga which Knútr fought against King Qnundr Óláfsson of Sweden and King Óláfr Haraldsson of Norway (the tveir jofrar) in 1027. Ten other stanzas from the poem are quoted in Knýtlinga saga which mostly relate to Knútr's campaigns in England around 1015–16.

Verse 218 Skj A I 343, B I 315. The second half of verse 17 of Arnórr's Magnúsdrápa, see note to verse 105. The complete stanza appears in Hkr III 62, Hulda–Hrokkinskinna (Fms VI 89), the first half only in Fagrskinna 225 and Flb IV 53.

P. 66/15–16 I. e. at kalla hana veðr vápna . . . eða gný eða glym þeira. Verse 219 Skj A I 23, B I 21. From Glymdrápa, the first half of verse 5. The whole stanza is found in Hkr I 105–6 (cf. 101 n. 2), Fagrskinna 70, and in Flb II 59 (Haralds þáttr hárfagra), where the lines of verse 219 appear as the second half of what is verse 9 of the poem in Skj. There are further quotations as verses 345, 256, and several verses appear in Hkr, Fagrskinna, ÓTM, Haralds þáttr

- hárfagra (Flb II 58–9). The poem is mainly about Haraldr hárfagri's battles by which he became ruler of all Norway. It may have been composed c. 890–900.
- Verse 220 Skj A I 69, B I 61. See note to verse 5. It is unclear whom this verse is about.
- Verse 221 Skj A I 93, B I 87. The first half of a lausavísa preserved like all Hólmgongu-Bersi's verse in Kormaks saga (see ÍF VIII 251). For the context see Kormaks saga ch. 12
- Verse 222 Skj A I 480, B I 452. From an unidentified praise-poem. Cf. note to verse 136. Perhaps by Einarr Skálaglamm (Vellekla?); see note to verse 18 and Fidjestøl 1982, 99–100, where other ambiguous attributions are examined (e. g. verse 281).
- Verse 223 Skj A I 131, B I 123. Taken to be from Vellekla, see note to verse 18. It is difficult to see how the words rómu Hárs fit into the sentence; since the other three kennings (sigbjarka serkir, sómmiðjungum, Hogna skúrir) seem complete without any further genitives, it is perhaps best to take rómu Hárs as an adverbial phrase, 'in battle'. See sómmiðjungr and róma in Glossary.
- Verses 224–5 Skj A I 184, B I 173. Anonymous and of unknown context. See note to verse 209. Verse 224 is not a complete sentence and a main verb must have been included in an unquoted line. Cf. Fidjestøl 1982, 167.
- P. 67/18 If hjálm is not an error, it is the first heiti in the list of names for helmet, though it would be unusual to use it as the base word in a kenning for helmet. R, W and T all include both hjálma (as first object of kalla) and hjálm (T has hjálma eða hjálmhott).
- P. 67/21 It seems that Ullr had a ship called Skjǫldr, though this is not mentioned elsewhere (cf. 19/32 and note); but kennings based on it (calling shields Ullr's ship) are common. See Glossary under askr, ask- and Ullr in Index.
- P. 67/23 er (2): lack of concord when verb precedes subject (T and U have eru, C reads skjǫldrinn kendr). Cf. 63/13 n. But there is also similar lack of concord in the next sentence where the subject comes first (and the complement is also plural). But it is possible that there hǫggvápn is to be taken as sg. and øxar eða sverð as a parenthesis. U, however, has eru kǫlluð in line 24.
- P. 67/28–9 Apparently 'because it is mostly in what is composed as eulogy [i. e. of warrior kings] that these kennings are required'. Since most poems are eulogies which require many terms for warfare and its attributes, there are many variations of such terms. Snorri's particular concern is to encourage the writing of traditional eulogies, and to encourage the use of the traditional diction associated with them.

P. 67/29 Svá kvað Víga-Glúmr add AC.

Verse 226 See verse 3 and note. The attribution in AC is lacking here in RTWU, probably omitted by a scribe (or scribes).

Verse 227 Skj A I 130, B I 123. Taken to be from Vellekla, see note to verse 18. Reichardt 1928, 138 reads með Sigvalda with fór.

Verse 228 Skj A I 145, B I 136. From a drápa about Earl Hákon Sigurðarson composed c. 987 (cf. Fagrskinna 131). The whole stanza of which this is the second half is preserved in Hkr I 281, ÓTM I 189–90 and Jómsvíkinga saga 1879, 81–2, and these sources preserve several further verses from the poem. The verse contrasts the hardships of battle with the luxury of sleeping with a beautiful woman (cf. verse 286 and Krákumál 20 (Skj A I 646–7)). Though Róða serkr could well be a kenning for coat of mail, it does not seem to be recorded as such in any extant verse, and in this verse it is difficult to see how Róða can belong with any other word than rastar. The heading to the quotation must be due to the writer's inattention. Cf. verse 196 n.

Verse 229–30 Skj A I 156, B I 148. From Hákonardrápa, see verse 10 n. Verse 230 If benfúr is n., it might be the (pl.) subject of rjóðask (indicative rather than inf.) and bjǫrt might go with it; then it is necessary to read fyrir before méilskúrum (as in C; A has við, and R has fyrir instead of fúr; cf. t. n.) to provide a complement for verða. Cf. Reichardt 1928, 61–3: Þaðan verða Sǫrla fǫt fyrða [fyrir] méilskúrum; bjǫrt benfúr rjóðask í blóði.

Verse 231 Skj A I 313, B I 290. First half of a lausavísa preserved in Grettis saga ch. 72 (ÍF VII 234–5), supposed to have been composed during his visit to Hegranessping, depicting the farmers' reaction to the discovery that Grettir is their unknown guest. Verse 232 = verse 146, see note to verses 145–9.

Verse 233 Skj A I 480, B I 452. Two more lines are quoted in U:

ylgr brunar hvatt ins helga hrægjǫrn í spor ǫrnum.

From an unidentified poem by Einarr Skúlason, cf. notes to verses 136, 222 and see note to verse 312. Parts of the description seem to imply a land battle, other parts a sea battle.

- Verse 234 Skj A I 318, B I 295. From a poem addressed to a ruler or chieftain thanking for a gift; perhaps from the same poem as verse 246.
- Verse 235 Skj A I 184, B I 173. Anonymous and context unknown. See note to verse 209.
- Verse 236 Skj A I 376, B I 346. Thought to be from Þjóðólfr Arnórsson's Sexstefja (it is attributed to Þjóðólfr in A and U), see note to verse 120.
- Verse 237–8 Skj A I 1, B I 1. Verses 1–2 of Ragnarsdrápa, see note to verse 24. Verse 237/3: see Þrúðr in Index.
- Verse 239 Skj A I 317, B I 294. Another verse from Knútsdrápa, see note to verse 115. Are there two shields (of different colours) or just one? Is it the king's own?
- Verse 240 Skj A I 182, B I 172. Anonymous fragment of unknown context. Kock (NN 85) compares the Old English Gnomic poems (Maxims I and II, ASPR III 162, line 153 and VI 56, line 37).
- Verse 241 Skj A I 79, B I 69; Frank 1978, 117–18. From Sigurðardrápa, see note to verse 12. Line 4 contains a fornt minni.
- Verse 242 Skj A I 138, B I 129–30. From Húsdrápa, about Baldr's funeral (Gylf. ch. 49). See note to verse 8.
- Verse 243 Skj A I 77, B I 67. From Gráfeldardrápa, see note to verse 6; also quoted in Fagrskinna 108. Fidjestøl (1982, 91–2) suggests that this half-stanza belongs with stanza 10 of the poem in Skj (which in Fagrskinna is the first half of another stanza).
- P. 70/29 grand hlífar: the kenning in verse 244/3 is grand hjálms. Hlíf 'protection' can refer to either shield or helmet, or indeed to any protective armour; cf. verse 472/6. Cf. also note to verse 245/3.
- Verses 244–5 Skj A I 479, B I 451. See note to verses 145–9.
- Verse 245/3 In view of the commentary, fjornir perhaps here means shield rather than helmet (cf. verse 471/4); the axe as enemy of the shield is also a more usual image. Kock NN 959 takes ríðendr as vocative, megu as indefinite ('one can').
- Verse 246 Skj A I 319, B I 295. See note to verse 234. Kock (NN 783) keeps the reading bezt (adv. 'best') in line 4, though borðs seems necessary to complete the spear-kenning: myrkdreki marka might mean spear on its own if ofljóst is being used (myrkdreki marka = ormr = spear; or eikinn could be taken as 'oaken' and thus qualifying the meaning of myrkdreki. This seems unlikely, as the only example in LP of ormr as a heiti for spear is in Krákumál

- 12 (Skj A I 644). Several serpent-names are, however, also names for swords (see Fáfnir, Góinn, Móinn in Index; langbarðr, níðhǫggr in Glossary; naðr in LP)
- Verse 247 Skj A I 124, B I 118. Second half of verse 8 of Vellekla, see note to verse 18. The whole stanza appears in Hkr I 209 and ÓTM I 55–6.
- Verse 248 Skj A I 155, B I 147. From Hákonardrápa, see note to verse 10. Verse 249 Skj A I 72–3, B I 63–4. From a lausavísa about Haraldr gráfeldr (composed c. 962; cf. verse 117); the complete stanza appears in Hkr I 200, Fagrskinna 58, ÓTM I 48.
- P. 72/11 It is possible that the scribe of R intended mensætt 'a settlement in the form of a neck-ring'.
- P. 72/16 mág sinn: presumably ironical, since Heðinn did not actually marry Hǫgni's daughter.
- Verses 250-54 Skj A I 2-3, B I 2-3. See note to verse 24.
- Verse 250 Kock NN 1505 takes færi as a noun, object of hugði ('thought there was opportunity (to experience))', til fárhuga veðrboða '(for) the storm-offerer's (i. e. Heðinn's?) hostile intent'. There are various possibilities with at: at þat 'in this, after this'; at sínum feðr; at færi þat veðr boga.
- Verse 251/5–8 Kock, NN 1853 I (cf. 1946–9, I 2), apparently reads Svá lét ey, þótt etti, sem orrostu letti jofrum, with úlfs . . . lifru parallel to orrostu. But letja takes an accusative object of the person, and jofrum must go with etti. Note the end-rhyme.
- Verse 252/1-4 glamma mun is the object of stoðva; stopping the wolf's desire, i. e. hunger, means fighting a battle and providing carrion. If glamma mun means wolf's pleasure, i. e. carnage, Letrat must be read as Lætrat 'does not cause'). Hoð is either in apposition to mun ('battle, the wolf's pleasure') or dat., 'in battle' (or instr., 'by battle'); or possibly the first element of the compound hoðglamma ('battle-wolf'; this might be a kenning for sword). See hoð in Glossary.
- Verse 253/3–4 Cf. verse 158 (stef). The stanza is perhaps complete, since a stef does not necessarily have to come in a full 8-line stanza.
- Verse 254/7–8 It is uncertain whether these two lines contain one prepositional phrase or two. In any case at in line 7 is hard to reconcile with the context (at = close by, i. e. along the shore, is proposed by Kock, NN 217) and af Reifnis skeiði 'from the sea' would make better sense. In line 8 raðálfs af mar would presumably mean 'from the ship'. Finnur Jonsson in Skj B I 3 takes skeiði with bráðum, swift in sailing (with Reifnis mar[i]; and bráðum at skeiði might also be possible, though bráðum could also be adverbial, 'swiftly'), and reads raðarálfs (with herr), omitting the preposition in line 8. If one reads of (of (3) in Glossary) in line 8 (or omits the word), it is possible to interpret the phrase af raðálfs Reifnis mar bráðum skeiði, 'from the sea-king's swiftrunning Reifnir's horse (i. e. ship)'.

P. 73/31 See the beginning of ch. 48 (66/15–16 and verse 220).

Verse 255 Skj A I 119, B I 113-4. Part of a lausavísa quoted in Víga-Glúms saga ch. 26 (ÍF IX 89–90). Cf. verse 3 and note. In spite of the interpretation in the commentary, it seems more natural to take the kenning to be 'staves of the weather of Viðrir's rod' (and the rod to be a spear, since this is Óðinn's weapon, rather than a sword) rather than 'staves of the rod of Viðrir's weather'. Though there are parallels for the attachment of the first half of a compound to another element of the kenning (e. g. dal-miskunn fiska verse 140/4), this would not be expected unless there was no more straightforward alternative (see Introduction pp. liii). See IF IX 89 n. It is not clear also whether the kenning belongs in the main statement or in the parenthesis. There is poor manuscript support for landa in the last line; mér til handa ('for my own benefit' however leaves rudda ek without a complement. Forðum can be taken with jarlar ('earls of old'; or the equivalent of sem jarlar gerðu forðum) or rudda or lék, but since the adverb is probably contrasted with $n\acute{u}$. . . um síðir in the second half of the verse ($\acute{I}F$ IX 90), it is perhaps best to take it with rudda.

P. 74/3–6 The author is here still basically concerned with kennings for man, even if they are made up of kennings for weapons or battle. Cf. Müller 1941, 124–5. In line 3 the subjects are orrosta, sverðit, menn. Verse 256 Skj A I 22, B I 20. From Glymdrápa, see note to verse 219. Also quoted in Fagrskinna 69 and Flb II 58 (Haralds þáttr hárfagra); in both of these it appears as the first half of a stanza with what in Skj is Glymdrápa verse 4/1–4 as the second half, cf.

Hkr I 103 and see Fidjestøl 1982, 87.

Verse 257 Skj A I 414, B I 384. This is all that survives of this poet's work, and he is not mentioned elsewhere. The context is unknown. Pat cannot be fitted into the sentence, since ófrið þenna is the object of segir. (But þenna could go with mar (NN 897); Kock also takes line 3 (with penna) as the main clause and the first three words of line 4 as a parenthesis.) Keeping the manuscript readings, one might perhaps understand the verb to be in line 1 and take line 2 as a parenthesis. This would make each line a separate statement (attmælt, attain 10). On the rhyming of syllables with attain 10 and attain 10 see Hreinn Benediktsson 1963.

Verse 258 Skj A I 317, B I 293. From Knútsdrápa, see note to verse 115. In spite of the commentary, lines 3–4 á Sǫlsa bekkjar trǫð must mean 'on the path of Sǫlsi's bench', i. e. 'the path of the ship', though in itself Sǫlsa bekkr could be a kenning for the sea ('Sǫlsi's resting place or land', 74/24–5). It would also be possible to take Sǫlsa bekkjar with hreinum ('reindeer of Sǫlsi's resting place', i. e. ships) and Sveiða with trǫð ('Sveiði's path', i. e. sea). Cf. notes to verses 196 and 228 for other cases of apparent discrepance between verses and commentary.

Verse 259 Skj A I 329, B I 303. Perhaps a lausavísa, but the context is unknown. Finnur Jónsson 1920–24, I 604, suggests it may relate to Óláfr helgi's expedition to Denmark in 1026 which culminated in the battle at Áin helga (Helgeå), and that it may be part of Róðadrápa (on which see Hkr II 281). There are other fragments that may be from this poem in the version of the second half of Skáldskaparmál in W (SnE 1924, 105) and in some manuscripts of Edda Magnúsar Ólafssonar (see Jón Helgason 1966, 176; Faulkes 1977–9, I 106, 152; Skj A I 329–30). Cf. verses 59 and 375 and see Fidjestøl 1982, 127.

Verse 260 Skj A I 452, B I 421. Probably a lausavísa; cf. verse 369. The verse-form is fjórðungalok, see Háttatal 11 (and t. n. there). Lines 5–6 are also quoted in TGT 27, 104 (in W). Lines 3–4 of hvíta«r» gnípur hvals ranníugtanni 'over the white peaks the bear of the whale's house' would be closer to the manuscript (T may have hvítar), though it would be unusual to use gnípur on its own of the waves. (Cf. Frank 1978, 75–6.)

P. 75/15 In SnE 1931, 157 and SnE 1848–87, I 442 punctuated 'bjǫrn skorðu er hér kallat. Skip er ok kallat hreinn'. See kalla in Glossary.

P. $75/16 \ \acute{a} \acute{o} r$: verse 258.

Verse 261 Skj A I 357, B I 329. The first half of a lausavisa quoted in Hkr III 89, Fagrskinna 237, Morkinskinna 85, Hulda-Hrokkinskinna (Fms VI 169). In Morkinskinna 86 and Hulda (Fms VI 170) the second half of this verse is also quoted as the second half of the verse attributed to Brennu-Njáll in Skáldskaparmál verse 355, and the whole is then attributed to King Haraldr. Cf. verses 284, 355 and notes.

Verse 262 Skj A I 483, B I 455. Probably part of a lausavísa by Einarr Skúlason. The king referred to is likely to be King Sveinn Eiríksson (d. 1157) and the verse may have been composed c. 1153. Cf. ÍF XXXV 275, where another verse by Einarr Skúlason complaining about his treatment by the king is preserved. Fidjestøl (1982, 100) discusses the possibility that this verse is by Einarr Skálaglamm.

Verse 263 Skj A I 539, B I 520. Probably part of a lausavísa. Also quoted in TGT 26, 100. The satirical tone is found in two other lausavísur by Máni, which are quoted in Sverris saga (1920, 91; nos 2 and 3 in Skj A I 539, B I 520; no. 4, quoted in Sturl. I 269, mentions gifts sent to Snorri Sturluson by Earl Hákon galinn). Line 2 drengum: see Noreen 1923, § 389 n. 4: this may be a genuine alternative form to drengjum (WTAU).

Verse 264 Skj A I 320, B I 296. See note to verse 30.

Verse 265 Skj A I 200, B I 190. The first half of a stanza also quoted in Hkr I 249 and Fagrskinna 138 from Bandadrápa, the stef of which is quoted as verse 304. Otherwise the only parts of the poem preserved are in Hkr, Fagrskinna and ÓTM. The poem, which is all that survives of Eyjólfr dáðaskáld's work, is about Earl Eiríkr Hákonarson, and composed c. 1010. See Hkr I 249 n., ÍF XXIX 165. The name of the poem probably relates to the occurrence of the word banda in the stef, the poet's nickname to the fact that he composed about the earl's dáðir.

Verse 266 Skj A I 417, B I 387. Context unknown, though the lines may be about the story of Hildr Hognadóttir, ch. 50. Nothing further is known of the poet though he could be the lawspeaker who died in 1181 (Sturl. I 124, 130, 160).

Verse 267 Skj A I 144, B I 135. Apparently from a Christian poem, but it is not known who the person being baptised is (it could be the poet). If this is by the same poet as verses 50 and 58, he is evidently another example of a heathen poet who became Christian (cf. note to verse 50), and the lines must be from the early eleventh century.

P. 76/22. It is possible that the placing of the chapter on kennings for Christ was determined by the words of verse 267, and that the beginning of ch. 53 was suggested by the words of verse 276.

Verse 268 Skj A I 152, B I 144. Like the previous verse, evidently part of a Christian poem by a poet known otherwise for his heathen verse. See note to verses 73–91. The context is unknown; the poem may have been addressed to Christ. Eilífr's verse is only known from SnE. In line 2, the form sunnr would give a better hending. Frank (1978, 118–19; see references there) takes setbergs as adverbial gen. 'on a table-mountain' with sitja; banda londum then becomes 'over (with) lands where the (heathen) gods are worshipped'. It is difficult to be sure what the poet had in mind by his reference to suðr at Urðar brunni. It may mean at Rome, or at the centre of the world (i. e. Jerusalem?). If this extract really is from a Christian poem, the phrase presumably implies that Christ has taken over the reponsibility for fate (or providence) from the heathen norns. Cf. Gylf. chs 15–16, esp. p. 17/30–31: '. . . Urðar brunnr. Þar eigu guðin dómstað sinn.'

Verse 269 Skj A I 314, B I 291. Probably part of a poem about Christ; Finnur Jónsson (1920–24, I 543) suggests it was composed in connection with the dedication of a church built by Skapti (cf. ÍF XIII 326 and n.). This is all that survives of verse by him, though he is said to have composed various poems (see Skáldatal, SnE III 274, 280, 548–52; Qlkofra þáttr, ÍF XI 91). He appears in several of the Sagas of Icelanders and in Hkr II and ÓH, see Index. Verse 270 Skj A I 452, B I 420. Probably from a poem about Christ; another fragment may be preserved in TGT 28 and 105 (in W). But Fidjestøl (1982, 153) suggests that both of these, together with a half-stanza (perhaps a stef) that replaces verse 398 in AB

But Fidjestøl (1982, 153) suggests that both of these, together with a half-stanza (perhaps a stef) that replaces verse 398 in AB (SnE 1848–87, II 461, 540; see note to verse 398 below) may be parts of a poem about St Knútr Sveinsson, probably composed after his death in 1086 (Markús is named as one of his poets in Skáldatal, SnE 1848–87, III 283). Cf. note to verse 111. Line 2 dyggjan has the ia written like v and a run together, and perhaps dyggvan was intended. Cf. Noreen 1923, § 430 n. 4.

Verses 271–3 Skj A I 572, B I 565–6. The four verses attributed to Eilífr kúlnasveinn in Skáldskaparmál are thought to be from a poem about Christ—besides these verses, verse 276; a verse quoted in FoGT 131–2 (in W) may also belong. Otherwise all that survives of this poet's work seems to be part of a lausavísa in TGT

(14, 65); this is, however, attributed to Eilífr Guðrúnarson in all three manuscripts, pace Finnur Jónsson 1920–24, II 116–17.

Verse 272/4 Editors omit the second ok.

Verse 273/2 sonar is emended to vinar (following TWA) in SnE 1931, 159, which would then refer to some saint; see SnE 1848–87, 448–9 n. Verse 274 Skj A I 265, B I 245. Thought by Finnur Jónsson (1920–24, I 595) to be from Sighvatr's memorial poem about St Óláfr, composed c. 1040, perhaps a stef that emphasised the king's sanctity (according to OH 553 the poem was stælt eptir uppreistarsogu, i. e. had interpolated sections referring to uppreistarsaga; uppreist here may mean the Ascension or Resurrection, or conceivably Creation). Other verses from this poem are to be found in Hkr and ÓH (one of these also in the fragments of the second half of Skáldskaparmál in W, SnE 1924, 105); one fragment perhaps in TGT. Fidjestøl (1982, 121) points out that verse 274 seems to be about the baptism of Christ and that there is little reason to assign it to a poem about St Óláfr (whatever uppreistarsaga means, it is unlikely to have referred to Christ's baptism). Cf. SnE 1848-87, III 345–6, where the verse is more plausibly assigned to an otherwise unknown religious poem about some saint.

Verse 275 Skj A I 353, B I 326. Thought to be from (the final verse of) Arnórr's memorial poem about Haraldr harðráði (composed c. 1067). Further quotations as verses 321, 376 and in TGT 14 and 65. The other extant verses from this poem are in Hkr, Hulda–Hrokkinskinna, Morkinskinna, Fagrskinna, ÓH. Fidjestøl (1982, 131, 132) is doubtful about whether any of the quotations in SnE and TGT except verse 376 really belong to this poem. In line 3 R has only one k in Gríkja, though it has two at 78/3 (written 'ck') and 19, but it is not certain that the writer wished to distinguish the two forms of the name (W has Girkja on the first two occurrences, T and A on all three). 'Guardian of Greeks and Russia' is an unusual title, but Garðar can hardly mean anything other than the Scandinavian towns in Russia.

Verse 276 Ski A I 572, B I 566. See note to verses 271–3.

Verse 277 Skj A I 462, B I 431. The only quotation from Einarr Skúlason's Geisli in Skáldskaparmál (though there are others in the version of Skáldskaparmál in W (SnE 1924, 112), TGT and Hulda-Hrokkinskinna, Hkr, ÓH). The poem as a whole is preserved at the beginning of Flb and in Bergsbók (i. e. Royal Library

- Stockholm Perg. fol. nr 1). It was composed c. 1153 in honour of St Óláfr and commissioned by King Eysteinn. See Hallberg 1975, 169.
- P. 78/17 koma saman: overlap, i. e. they are ambiguous. Most kennings for man or warrior or king are unspecific (i. e. they are fornofn, pronominatio or antonomasia), even though generally it is an individual that is referred to (they are not usually the equivalent of common nouns). Only the context (stoð) can decide who is meant, particularly in kennings for king/God (cf. 76/22 n.). Such kennings are sannkenningar or viðkenningar, but not sérkenningar (proper-noun kennings) in the sense of unambiguously indicating one particular person, even though they may mean an individual. Skaldic poets go to great lengths to avoid naming the persons who are the topics of their verse. See Introduction pp. xxix–xxxiii.
- P. 78/21 Engla konung: presumably in addition to the general ambiguity about kennings for king which in some contexts may refer to God there is the further ambiguity in the word Engla, which can be gen. pl. of engill 'angel'.
- P. 78/22 ritat: agrees with a generalised notion of what was written (orð), hence n., rather than with the actual word kenning; though the f. form rituð may be intended (the scribe of R wrote ritað; ritat WA, rituð T and U; cf. 95/9); áðr: 78/11 (cf. hǫlða stillir in verse 276). Verse 278 = verse 5/5–8, see note.
- Verse 279 Skj A I 76, B I 66. Assumed by Finnur Jónsson (in Skj) to be from Gráfeldardrápa, see note to verse 6, though Fidjestøl (1982, 91) points out that the content is too vague for it to be certain whether it belongs to that poem. The first two lines are also quoted as verse 394.
- Verse 280 Skj A I 377, B I 346. Thought to be from Sexstefja (cf. Fidjestøl 1982, 136), see note to verse 120. In line 1 hildar is a possible reading, but conflicts with the list at 78/24.
- Verse 281 Skj A I 480, B I 452. A fragment of unknown context, evidently about a king of Norway. Cf. note to verses 136 and 128–32. On the attribution, see Fidjestøl 1982, 100 and see also note to verse 312.
- Verse 282 Skj A I 346, B I 318. From Porfinnsdrápa, see note to verse 1. Quoted again as verse 344 (note variants), but not elsewhere.
- P. 79/32–80/1 'Those judgments and punishments shall be there as valid as those of the king himself.'

P. 80/10 veitanda, gætanda, sætti are all, surprisingly, acc. sg. (though cf. Noreen 1923, § 422 n. 3).

P. 80/15 forneskju: it is perhaps not necessary to add the j; fornesku may be a genuine form, see Noreen 1923, § 263 n. 2; cf. verse 263/2 n. Verse 283 Skj A I 492, B I 464. From a poem about Sigurðr Jórsalafari, see note to verse 199.

Verse 284 Skj A I 359, B I 330. The second half of a lausavísa about the Norwegian chieftain Einarr þambarskelfir, subsequently killed by the king c. 1056. The whole stanza appears in Hkr III 124, Fagrskinna 263, Hulda–Hrokkinskinna (Fms VI 270).

Verse 285 Skj A I 275, B I 254. From an unknown poem, context uncertain; though it is likely to be from a poem about St Óláfr. There is insufficient evidence to connect this fragment with any other known poem by Sighvatr, though if it did not seem to be other than an eyewitness report it might be taken to belong to the same poem as verse 286 (see Fidjestøl 1982, 123, where it is suggested that it may belong in Tryggvaflokkr). Kock (NN 683) takes the last line as a separate statement, 'in future I shall not tell about any minor engagements'. He also takes nadda él as parallel to víg and at is emended to enn (as WT; U has it): 'again recently'? The form engin would not be expected in verse earlier than the fourteenth century. In LP 110b it is suggested that the correct reading should be engi en (i. e. in)

Verse 286 Skj A I 229, B I 218. The second half of a stanza from Nesjavísur, about King Óláfr Haraldsson's battle with Earl Sveinn Hákonarson at Nesjar in Oslofjord in 1015. This is the only quotation from this poem in Skáldskaparmál; there are others in TGT, Fagrskinna, the Legendary saga, Hkr, ÓH. The whole stanza appears in Hkr II 63 and ÓH 93, the first half only in Fagrskinna 175. The picture painted is unusual (mead being served on board ship by a woman before the battle); but if fyrir means 'instead of' we have the conventional contrasting of battle with peaceful activities. It also depends on how the adverbial phrases are ordered; possibly 'It was not then on the ship like when a maid served mead... instead of (or in return for?) battle.' Cf. verse 228 and note.

Verse 287 = verse 196, see note.

P. 81/10 kallaðir, i. e. kallaðir eru.

Verse 288 Skj A I 156, B I 148. From Hákonardrápa, see note to verse 10.

Verse 289 Skj A I 211, B I 201. Context unknown, see note to verse 133. Kock, NN 574, suggests taking stjór(n)viðjar with hlemmisverð and stáls with buðlunga máli; thus leaving húflangan skæ on its own as a term for ship.

Verse 290 Skj A I 344, B I 316. From Porfinnsdrápa, see note to verse 1. Kock, NN 827, takes the first two lines and the last two words as one statement (sýn = sight, glance) and mein as obj. of taka. At NN 2521 it is suggested that rather than of governing enda, enda may be an adverb and sessa acc. with of. Arnórr's sons do not seem to be mentioned elsewhere, any more than his marriage in verse 296.

Verse 291 = verse 118, see note.

Verse 292 Skj A I 79, B I 69. Assumed to be from Sigurðardrápa, perhaps the first verse; see note to verse 12. It is not certain to whom the poem is addressed. At 82/6 verse 292 is taken to be addressed to Hákon Sigurðarson, but the verse in Hkr I 168, which is thought to be from the same poem, is ascribed to Sigurðardrápa; Finnur Jónsson (1920–24, I 529) takes the recipient to be Earl Sigurðr. See Haraldr (1) in Index and note to verse 12; and cf. Frank 1978, 117. Orr is perhaps more likely to go with sonr than with ek; but emending greppa to greppr would make it possible to keep the MS lætr ('the generous poet proclaims'; cf. Kock's orgreppa, NN 2510), though the kenning 'ale of the giantess' = poetry would be unusual. $S \acute{y} rar$ could be spared from the kenning but would be difficult to fit in elsewhere. Kock (NN 2510) suggests Sýrar (Freyja's) sannreynir = Óðr, cf. Gylf. ch. 35, = $\delta \delta r$ (acc. with δa after heyri), i. e. poetry $(ofli\delta st)$, and takes fentanna orgreppa jastrín mína as the object of lætk uppi. This of course would make it impossible for the addressee to be either Sigurðr or Hákon (it would have to be the son of some Haraldr), and conflicts with the commentary. Fentanna jast-Rín might be a parallel to Hnitbjarga logr.

Verses 293–5 Skj A I 368, B I 338–9. From a runhent poem on Haraldr harðráði (c. 1055). There is another stanza from this poem preserved in Hkr III 70, Fagrskinna 228 (lines 1–4 only), Hulda–Hrokkinskinna (Fms VI 132), Flb IV 59. Verse 294 relates to his time in Russia after 1030 (Hkr III 69–70). The king lamented in verse 295 is Magnús góði (d. 1047).

Verse 293: it is not clear whether harðræðit or veðr is the subject, and whether vex is trans. or intrans. (see vaxa in Glossary). Kock (NN 3229) takes svá at as rel. with harðræðit.

Verse 294 hlýri: Haraldr harðráði (Sigurðarson) and St Óláfr (Haraldsson) were actually only half-brothers; their mother was Ásta Guðbrandsdóttir.

Verse 296 Skj A I 332, B I 306. From Rognvaldsdrápa, see note to verse 114. This verse seems to be the only source for Arnórr's marriage with a member of the Earl's family.

Verse 297–8 Skj A I 346, 348, B I 319, 321. From Porfinnsdrápa, see note to verse 1. Verse 297 is the second half of a stanza found in Orkneyinga saga, ÍF XXXIV 61; verse 298 is only found here. Bitu verse 297/1 is absolute; kind in line 3 dat. of advantage.

Verse 299 Skj A I 122, B I 117. See note to verse 192.

Verse 300a-b Skj A I 5, 182, B I 5, 172. The kennings in these verses are very obscure and even the literal meanings are in many cases far from certain. They are reminiscent of Irish retoiric. If either is genuine, both are likely to be by Bragi. They are not known from elsewhere. The first is only in R and (in part) C; the second is also in TUA. In both verses the first word may be the first of the list of complements rather than the subject, 'They call me troll/poet' rather than 'Trolls/poets call me . . .'

Verse 301 Skj A I 79, B I 69; Sigrøðr in line 2 is probably Earl Sigurðr (1); his mogr is Earl Hákon, and this stanza at least seems to be from a poem about him, though A has Hákonar, and Finnur Jónsson (Skj A I 79; 1920–24, I 529) ascribes the stanza to Sigurðardrápa. See notes to verses 12 and 292 and cf. Haraldr (1) in Index. The words meir and fleira imply that the verse is the beginning of a second or subsequent section of the poem, though conceivably they mean just that this is a new poem. Fidjestøl (1982, 93) suggests the possibility that the poem was about both Earl Sigurðr and his son Hákon.

Verse 302 Skj A I 213, B I 203. From Eiríksdrápa, thought to have been composed after the death of Earl Eiríkr Hákonarson (probably c. 1023, though neither the date of the earl's death nor that of the poem is certain; see Hkr II 32 n. and Fidjestøl 1982, 116). The complete stanza appears in Hkr I 276, Fagrskinna 129, ÓTM I 181–2 and Jómsvíkinga saga 1879, 69–70; these sources, together with ÓH and Knýtlinga saga, altogether preserve 13 stanzas of the poem (cf. Hkr I 275 n.). Another half-stanza is quoted (probably) in Skáldskaparmál as verse 324, and half of stanza 6 appears as verse 313. Fidjestøl (1982, 116) took the verses assigned by Finnur Jónsson to Belgskakadrápa (Skj A I 212; in Fagrskinna, Hkr, ÓTM, TGT) as part of the same poem, which he thought was not necessarily a memorial poem. Kock (NN 580) takes mærðar ǫrr ('eager for glory') with skjǫldhlynr; this is possible, since óðr is the word for poetry that is being exemplified in this verse.

Verse 303 Skj A I 138, B I 130; see note to verse 8. U here (after 84/18) adds a verse (perhaps the last verse of a poem) attributed to Ormr Steinþórsson (Skj A I 416, B I 386; SnE 1848–87, II 340), see notes to verses 29 and 138:

Svá kvað Ormr Steinþórsson:

Ek hefi orðgnótt *miklu (o[pt] finnum þat) minni (fram tel ek leyfð fyrir lofða ljós) en ek munda kjósa.

In line 1 U has mikla, which could be taken with orðgnótt, though that would be uncomfortable with minni following; ljósa in line 4 could go with either orðgnótt or leyfð, though more likely with the latter, and the omission of -a in the manuscript may simply indicate that the vowel would be elided before en.

Verse 304 Skj A I 202, B I 192; see note to verse 265. There is no alliteration; the three lines are part of a klofastef, and each line appears in other stanzas (lines 2 and 3 twice) as the second part of various couplets in the poem (quoted in Hkr I 250, 337, 339–40 and in two cases in ÓTM II 242), though they belong together as a continuous statement (there are also two more lines constituting probably part of a second stef that are not quoted here). See Skj B I 191–2; Fidjestøl 1982, 114. Cf. also note to verse 10.

Verse 305 = verse 94/1-4.

Verse 306 Skj A I 130, B I 123; see note to verse 18. The complete stanza is preserved in Hkr I 262 and the first half of it in Fagr-skinna 119. C adds here Vafþrúðnismál 47/4–6 (cf. Gylf. 54).

Verse 307 Skj A I 71, B I 62; see note to verse 5. The first line may belong to words in the unquoted first half of the verse (NN 2305). The next word would then be a conjunction (en).

Verse 308 = verse 12.

P. 85/13 It is not clear where these names are supposed to be recorded; perhaps the author has access to written lists that he is using in this part of Skáldskaparmál. A adds hér (er hér eru ritin), but this may be a scribal rationalisation. Cf. SnE 1931, 258/31; verses 516–17 below; the pula of himins heiti in A and B, SnE 1848–87, II 485–6, 569. Cf. also 108/1 and note below. It is not clear whether i kvæðum would include pulur. Of the names for sky or the heavens at 85/17–18, hlýrnir, andlangr and leiptr (= lightning) appear in various (often rather late) poems (cf. LP), hlýrnir also in Alvíssmál 12 and the pula in verse 516; ljósfari and drífandi are found only in the pula of names for the sun in verse 517. The rest (or variants of them) all come in verse 516.

P. 85/19–20 Cf. Alvíssmál 14, 16; as well as the pula in verse 517. Álfrǫðull also appears in other eddic and skaldic poetry (also rǫðull in the latter; see LP). See Álfrǫðull in Index and Glossary.
P. 85/21–2 Cf. the pula of tungls heiti in A and B, SnE 1848–87, II

485, 569; and Alvíssmál 14.

- Verse 309 Skj A I 375, B I 345. The Jarl is unidentified; the verse is usually taken to be part of Sexstefja addressed to Haraldr harðráði (see note to verse 120), and only C has the word Jarl in full; RAT have what may be the abreviation for it, I or J; editors have emended to Qrr (a. 'liberal'; with herðir) (or Ár, i. e. ár (3) in Glossary, Kock NN 3085) and assumed that the person referred to is the king. In line 2 NN 2032 suggests optherðir ('frequent promoter').
- Verse 310 Skj A I 290, B I 267. From Óláfsdrápa sænska, addressed to King Óláfr of Sweden in about 1018. The metre is hálfhnept (Háttatal 77, cf. p. 85 there). The only remnants of this poem are the quotations in Skáldskaparmál; besides this verse, verses 395, 383, 390, 340, 365. Cf. Hkr II 91–2; ÓH 688; Finnur Jónsson 1920–24, I 574.
- Verse 311 Skj A I 317, B I 294. It is assumed that Haraldr (in R and C; written 'Har' with abbreviation sign in both) at 86/1 is a mistake for Hallvarðr (so T; written 'Hallv' with superscript r in A), and that this verse belongs to his Knútsdrápa, see note to verse 115.
- Verse 312 Skj A I 458, B I 426. Thought to be possibly from a poem about the four sons of Haraldr gilli of Norway (note doglinga, line 2), composed after 1142 (see Finnur Jónsson 1920–24, II 65) but before the death of Magnús Haraldsson; this cannot be dated precisely, but was probably not long after 1142 (see Hkr III 321). There is a stanza in Hkr III 321–2 and Hulda–Hrokkinskinna (Fms VII 229) that is also taken to be from this poem. Fidjestøl (1982, 155) argues that the verse in Hkr III 331 (also in Hulda–Hrokkinskinna, Fms VII 238–9) assigned by Finnur Jónsson (in Skj A I 458) to Sigurðardrápa, the first verse Finnur Jónsson (in Skj A I 475) assigns to Eysteinsdrápa (in Hkr III 327, Morkinskinna 443, Hulda/Hrokkinskinna, Fms VII 235), and also verses 281, 233, 336 and possibly 335 in Skáldskaparmál all belong to this poem. Cf. note to verse 399.

Verse 313 Skj A I 215, B I 204. The second half of verse 6 of Eiríksdrápa, see note to verse 302. The whole stanza is found in Hkr I 371, Fagrskinna 166, 163 (here the two halves separated and the lines in verse 313 attached to a different half-verse), and ÓTM II 300.

Verse 314 = verse 217.

Verse 315 Skj A I 99, B I 93. See note to verse 37; about Qgmundr's burial.

Verse 316 = verse 210.

Verse 317 Skj A I 184, B I 174. Anonymous fragment, perhaps tenth century. See note to verse 209. It would be possible to take hrynbeðs Fjorgynjar áls with hreggi and ár steðja Eldis mála with orgildi. Cf. Glossary under mál and hrynbeðr.

P. 87/8–9 The compiler is now discussing kennings, although this part of Skáldskaparmál is mainly about heiti. See also 90/16–17, 26–9, and chs 69–72. Við may be adverbial in line 8: 'It is right to refer to blood or carrion in terms of it (i. e. the wolf) so as to refer to them as its food or drink' rather than 'It is right to refer to it in terms of blood or carrion so as to call them its food or drink.' The next sentence is then more likely to mean 'It is not right to refer to them thus using names of other animals' than 'It is not right to refer to other animals in these terms'. Cf. note to 90/26–9.

Verse 318 Skj A I 376, B I 345; see note to verse 120. Finnur Jónsson (Skj B I 345, following Konráð Gíslason (1889, 75)) emends úlfr to úlf, object of spenja, and takes á sár as a prepositional phrase: sonr Sigurðar kom norðan at spenja úlf ór skógi á sár.

Verse 319 Skj A I 37, B I 32; see note to verse 31. The text of the first two lines agrees fairly closely with the text in Worm 1636, 233 (and less closely with the fragment ε) against Wolfenbüttelbók, which has Sveit sárs freka svalg und dreka. The kennings imply the hyperbole of blood described as a wave (breki) washing over the raven's beak described in terms of a ship's stem.

Verse 320 Skj A I 477, B I 449. Half of one of the two stanzas surviving from Elfarvísur, composed c. 1160 about the chieftain Grégóríús Dagsson and his battle on the Göta river in 1159. Both stanzas appear complete in Hkr III 358–9 and Hulda–Hrokkinskinna (Fms VI 266–7). This half-verse is also quoted in the fragment of the Fifth Grammatical Treatise in A, SnE 1848–87, II 397; Ólsen 1884, 159.

Verse 321 Skj A I 350, B I 323; see note to verse 275.

Verse 322 Skj A I 384, B I 354. Thought to be from a poem about Haraldr harðráði (cf. Skáldatal, SnE 1848–87, III 275, 596–7). There is another half-stanza in A, with the pulur (SnE 1848–87, II 493) and two more in Hulda–Hrokkinskinna (Fms VI 133, 139), one of which is also in Hkr III 75–6 and Fagrskinna 230, the other in Flb IV 59. Lines 2–3 of each half-verse constitute forn minni, in each case referring to part of the story of Sigurðr Fáfnisbani and the Gjúkungar, chs 40–42 above. Cf. Háttatal 13, though the verse-form is like that of Háttatal 12.

P. 88/9–18 In U verses 323–4 come immediately after verse 322, before names for bear. A and B also keep the verses illustrating kennings for wolf together, but T and C have the same order as R.

Verse 323 Skj A I 535, B I 516. Thought to be possibly the only surviving fragment of a poem about King Magnús Erlingsson of Norway (1161–84; cf. Skáldatal, SnE 1848–87, III 277, 643). Otherwise only two verses (probably lausavísur) in Sverris saga 1920, 72 survive of this poet's work. See Fidjestøl 1982, 160. Each line means that the king fought brave battles, thus providing carrion for wolves (áttmælt, cf. Háttatal 10). Verse 324 is similar.

Verse 324 Skj A I 217, B I 206; not recorded elsewhere, see note to verse 302. This presumably belongs with Eiríksdrápa, though there is nothing in particular to support this (Fidjestøl 1982, 117); Þórðr's patronymic (Kolbeinsson) is not given here (in U the verse is attributed to Þjóðólfr).

Verses 325–7 Skj A I 649–50, B I 656; a further verse from Porgrímspula as verse 331. Cf. the pula of horse-names in A and B (Skj A I 685–6; SnE 1848–87, II 487, 571). These pulur are assumed to be from the twelfth century, but nothing further is known of their origin or authorship.

- Verses 328–30 Skj A I 650–51, B I 656–7. Though the genre of the two poems is related, the name Alsvinnsmál in RTC, lacking in U, seems to have nothing to do with the eddic poem Alvíssmál, also called Alsvinnsmál in SnE, see Index, and is given as Kálfsvísa in A. Cf. note to verses 325–7. In verse 329 reið needs to be supplied in lines 1-5, unless the five nominatives and five datives are all to be taken with til iss riðu, in which case 329/1-4 perhaps belongs with the same incident as that described in 329/7-10 (all taking part in the same battle?). It may however be pointed out that although annarr in verse 329/7 probably means annarr [hestr] (or annarr [Hrafn], cf. Hkr I 57), this horse may have been named Annarr (cf. Gylf., Index), even though Aðils's horse is said to have been called Slungnir or Sløngvir (see Slungnir in Index); and lines 9-10 could be read Grár [reið] Hvarfaði, Geiri Undaðr, with Hvarfaðr and Geirr being the names of two more horses and Grár and Undaðr the names of their riders. The incident referred to in verse 329/5-10 does not seem to appear in any other source, though the battle between Aoils and Ali on the ice of Lake Vänern appears on p. 58 above. Cf. Hkr I 57–9, ÍF XXXV 29, 42. See Gering and Sijmons 1927–31, I 436. Verse 330 has two extra lines in A: Ullr ýmissum | en Óðinn Sleipni.
- P. 90/1–2 The plural verbs draga and fylgja perhaps indicate that the pairs of names are not alternative names for the same horses but pairs of horses that drag alternate nights and days. Whichever is meant, it is likely that the explanation is that the writer had two traditions about the names of the horses of night and day (or even four in the case of the latter) and wanted to reconcile them. Cf. Gylf. chs 10 and 11; sem fyrr er ritat presumably refers to ch. 11. Verse 331 See note to verses 325–7. Line 1 yxna written 'vxna' in R; cf. Hreinn Benediktsson 1986, 76.
- P. 90/10–12 Compare the pula of orma heiti in A and B, SnE 1848–87, II 486–7, 570.
- P. 90/16 lopt = sphere (in which a planet moves) in GkS 1812, 4to 2v, Alfræði II 246: Sið eru kollut lopt i bokum, þau er himin tungl hverfi um. Ok er tungl i neðsta lopti.
- P. 90/16–17 Again the list includes kennings. Cf. 87/8–9 n. With ch. 59 compare the pula of veðra heiti in A and B, SnE 1848–87, II 486, 569.
- Verse 332 Alvíssmál (this form of the name is found in A and C)

- verse 20. Cf. also verse 380. Line 4 ópi (see t. n.) is perhaps a genuine form (and if so must here be n. or f.); cf. Skírnismál 29; ÁBM, s. v.
- P. 90/26 With ch. 60 compare the pulur of hauks heiti, hrafns heiti, hana heiti, ara heiti and fugla heiti in A and B, SnE 1848–87, II 487–9, 571–2.
- P. 90/26–9 'There are two birds that there is no need to refer to in any other way than by calling blood or carrion their drink or food, that is the raven and the eagle [i. e. any bird referred to as drinker of blood or eater of carrion means raven or eagle]. All other masculine birds can be referred to in terms of blood or carrion and then it means eagle or raven.' The object of kenna can be either the base word or the referent; the object of kenna við is normally the determinant, sometimes the base word. See kenna in Glossary. Again kennings are discussed in this section mainly about heiti (see 87/8–9 n.).
- Verse 333 Skj A I 376, B I 346; see note to verse 120. Fidjestøl (1982, 139) argues that the two halves do not belong together (they are made into two separate quotations in A and C—the first adds after line 4 Svá kvað hann enn, in the second ok enn is added above the line) and following Björn Magnússon Ólsen takes verse 333/1–4 as belonging with the four lines in TGT 106 (verse 32 in Skj). Cf. his interpretations on pp. 140–1.
- Verse 334 Skj A I 131, B I 123–4; see note to verse 18. But the description of battle in this verse is very general and it cannot certainly be said to be about Earl Hákon (see Fidjestøl 1982, 97). It uses two of the features of liðhendr háttr (cf. Háttatal 41 and 53), i. e. there is assonance (skothending) between each pair of lines (odd and even) and the first hending in the even lines falls on the first syllable. Cf. note to verse 88/4.
- Verse 335–6 Skj A I 480, B I 452; fragments of an unknown poem or poems, perhaps about some ruler's successful warfare, like verse 339. See note to verse 312; cf. also notes to verses 128–32 and 136. In verse 335/4 bliksólar garmi must be a kenning for sword or other weapon (dat. with stýra) but 'dog of the sun' would not normally mean that. There has probably been some scribal confusion with Mánagarmr (see Gylf. ch. 12). Borð or barðsólar garmr would make an acceptable kenning for sword (dog, i. e. damager of gunwale- or prow-sun, i. e. shield; barð could mean ship by synecdoche). Verse 335 is dunhenda (Háttatal 24). On the metre of verse 336, cf. Háttatal 8 and note there on pp. 50–51; line 1 has seven syllables, but par er may originally have been pars (bragarmál, Háttatal 8/20). Line 3 may have resolution in Muninn. The rhythm and placing of the hendings and alliterative staves have some similarity to Háttatal 28 and 35 (skjálfhenda).

Verse 337 is the second half of verse 3, see note to that verse (Víga-Glúms saga, ÍF IX 95; note the extensive textual variants from the Möðruvallabók text of the saga).

Verse 338 Skj A I 306, B I 283. See note to verse 144.

Verse 339 Skj A I 481, B I 452–3. See note to verses 335–6 (and cf. note to verses 128–32) and Fidjestøl 1982, 156.

Verse 340 Skj A I 289, B I 267. See note to verse 310. The metre is again hálfhnept.

Verse 341 First half of verse 93. At line 2 the emendation is perhaps not necessary, though it would be unusual to refer to a giant by using a feminine base-word, so ylgr is presumably a mistake (all other manuscripts have úlfr). In verse 93 the text has úlfr in TW (R is there illegible).

Verse 342 Skj A I 184, B I 173. Only recorded here, and the authorship and context as well as the identity of the person addressed are unknown. In Edda Magnúsar Ólafssonar 262, 338 it is attributed to Þjóðólfr (i. e. the texts there have idem/hinn sami instead of Ok sem hér er). Kock (NN 844E) maintains that hregg-skornis handa mjǫð is a kenning for poetry ('mead of, i. e. in the hands of, Óðinn in eagle shape') and that the two lines are complete in sense.

Verse 343 Skj A I 305, B I 283. See note to verse 144. Like verse 338, this is only preserved here, so the context is uncertain, as is also the text. It seems that the poet was anxious because a battle was going to take place (it looked good to the raven), but that then he heard good news. Fidjestøl 1982, 166, takes the verse to be an introductory one, in which case the good news is perhaps the poem itself and the greppr is the audience. Kock (NN 768) among other things takes víðis greppr to be a kenning for seafarer, and the object of hlýði vel to be góðu gallópnis spjalli. He also makes ekka the base-word of a kenning for battle.

Verse 344 = verse 282.

Verse 345 Skj A I 22, B I 20; also in Hkr I 102 as the second half of verse 34 there. See note to verse 219. Snorri (in Hkr I 103)

clearly took Nqkkvi as the name of a king against whom Haraldr hárfagri fought; if he was wrong (cf. Ágrip (\acute{IF} XXIX 4), where $skei\partial ar\ brandr$, part of a ship, is taken to be the name of a king), and it is the common noun meaning 'boat', it must be acc. pl., object of rak parallel to rak rak rak. Then the subj. would have to be rak Verse 346 Skj A I 482, B I 453. See note to verses 128–32. Fidjestøl 1982, 208, argues for keeping the reading of R (and all other manuscripts) in line 2, taking flóðs glóðir (cf. Glossary s. v. glóðir), a kenning for gold, as referring to the ornament on the ship's stem. Cf. verse 356/1. If an -ó- were not required by the rhyme, glǫðum would be a possible reading, see Glaðr in Index. Verse 347 = verse 126.

Verse 348 Skj A I 317, B I 293. See note to verse 115.

Verse 349 Skj A I 185, B I 174. Only recorded here, and the authorship and context are unknown. Cf. verses 356, 364.

Verse 350 Skj A I 35, B I 30. Verse 1 of Egill's Hofuðlausn, see note to verse 31

Verse 351 Skj A I 482, B I 454. See note to verses 128–32. In line 3 R has 'elsnuin', i. e. élsnúinn, which could be m. acc. with þjálma.

Verse 352 Skj A I 338, B I 311. The lines appear as the second half of verse 2 in Hkr III 4; also in ÓH 614, Hrokkinskinna (Fms VI 22), Flb IV 28. See note to verse 105.

Verse 353 Skj A I 386–7, B I 356; the first half of verse 102 in Hkr III 109–10 (and Fagrskinna 251, Morkinskinna 156, Hulda–Hrokkinskinna, Fms VI 252). Taken to be from a drápa about Haraldr harðráði (composed after 1048) quoted in several places in Hkr, Fagrskinna, ÓH, Morkinskinna, Hulda–Hrokkinskinna. The words it næsta perhaps mean that the poem listed a succession of expeditions.

Verse 354 Skj A I 321, B I 297. See note to verses 124 and 4.

- Verse 355 Skj A I 139, B I 130. In Morkinskinna 86 and Hulda (Fms VI 170) these lines form the first half of a verse attributed to Haraldr harðráði (cf. Skj A I 357). In Hkr III 89 (and Fagrskinna 237, Morkinskinna 85 and Hulda-Hrokkinskinna (Fms VI 169)) verse 261 appears as the first half instead (see Finnur Jónsson 1920–24, I 463). No other poetry is attributed to Njáll.
- P. 95/1 skips eða gulls: but the following names for the sea are mostly not used in kennings either for ships or for gold, at any rate in the verses quoted here, though there are examples of the second in verses 360, 368 and 369. The verses illustrating them on the whole do not contain kennings (the words for wave in verses 358, 359, 361, 362, 364, 365, at any rate, seem to be used literally as ordinary common nouns). Nevertheless the reading of A, skip eða gull, is preferable, since the meaning must be 'to refer to ships and gold in terms of them'.
- Verse 356 Skj A I 184, B I 174. Also quoted in TGT 29 and 110 (in W and A), but the authorship and context are unknown. Cf. verses 349 and 364.
- P. 95/7–9 See the beginning of ch. 25 (36/24–6; cf. note to 36/25–6). Einarr Skúlason's verse, however, has not been quoted before in any version of the text; both references are in RC, but neither is in AB; the first only is in T. A fairly clear indication either that the arrangement of the author's original has been altered, or that the work was under revision and never completed by the author. See Introduction, pp. x–xi and xx–xxi.
- P. 95/9 ritat: cf. note to 78/22.
- Verse 357 Skj A I 482, B I 454. See note to verses 128–32 and cf. the verse in A, SnE 1848–87, II 493; also verse 478 below. A verse referred to by its opening lines (though not in T, which omits the quotation), cf. 36/8. The verse in AB (where it is placed after beira in line 12 instead of the second list of names) continues:

glymr Unnar vex—grenni Gondlar skúfs ok Dúfa; brædd strýkr Blóðughadda —brimsólgin fellr Kólga hlýr—þar er Hefring stærir haflauðr um við rauðan.

B has skilr for par er in line 7, and of for um in line 8. Verse 358 Skj A I 393, B I 362–3. The first half of a verse in Morkinskinna 92 (and Flb IV 80 and Hulda–Hrokkinskinna, Fms VI 180; only the second half is in Fagrskinna 242) from a poem about Haraldr harðráði also quoted in verses 371, 378, 410 (these three are not found elsewhere); further verses in Fagrskinna, Morkinskinna, Hulda–Hrokkinskinna, Hkr (see Finnur Jónsson 1920–24, I 623; Fidjestøl 1982, 144). In line 1 R and C have bæði, but although æ can be for e in medieval manuscripts, and A has beð, this cannot be for beði (so T and B), because a long root syllable is required for the metre. See textual note and Noreen 1923, § 368.

Verse 359 Skj A I 296, B I 272. See note to verse 196. In line 2 the form sylgháar would make up the usual six syllables (cf. Háttatal 7). Verse 360 Skj A I 416, B I 385. See note to verse 29. In R first attributed to Kormakr, but then altered to Ormr. The description appears to be of the unknown recipient of the poem rather than of Snæfríðr. Cf. Ólafur Halldórsson 1990, 226 and 230.

Verse 361 Skj A I 399, B I 368. See note to verse 191.

Verse 362 Skj A I 482, B I 454. See note to verses 128-32.

Verse 363 Skj A I 321, B I 297. See note to verses 124 and 4. The verse-form here, as in verse 371, is stælt (Háttatal 12). Kock (NN 785) takes fyllar skautbjørn as a kenning for ship (with fjøll hrynja á), and vetrliði skíða Gusis nauta ('bear of the skis of arrows', i. e. of shields) as another (subject of fram æsisk). As Finnur Jónsson (LP 503) points out, skautbjørn would be an adequate kenning for ship on its own, and moreover fjøll needs to be qualified (i. e. by fyllar) if it is to mean waves. Gusis nauta remains difficult to fit in, but since skíða vetrliði does not seem to make an adequate kenning for ship on its own, perhaps these four words do belong together ('bear of skis of flags'?). Cf. Glossary under nautr (2).

Verse 364 Skj A I 185, B I 174. Only recorded here, and the authorship and context are unknown. Cf. verses 349, 356.

Verse 365 Skj A I 289–90, B I 267. See note to verse 310. Lines 3–4 are only in TAB.

Verse 366 Skj A I 4, B I 4. See note to verse 24. This verse is again about Pórr's fight with the Midgard serpent (cf. Gylf. ch. 48).

Verse 367 Skj A I 475, B I 447. From Einarr Skúlason's Runhenda (composed after 1152), about King Eysteinn Haraldsson of Norway. There are further quotations from this poem as verses 377 and

- 403, and in Morkinskinna, Hulda–Hrokkinskinna, Hkr. It is mostly about the events of c. 1150–52, see Hkr III 326–30.
- Verse 368 Skj A I 480, B I 452. It is evidently from a poem by Einarr Skúlason thanking a patron for the gift of a horn. Cf. notes to verses 128–32 and 136, and note to verses 145–9.
- Verse 369 Skj A I 453, B I 421. Probably part of a lausavísa; see note to verse 260. It is not clear whether sá slíðráls reginn refers to the poet or his opponent, and whether the 'spoiling' of poetry means composing slander or just making bad verse. The words síðr en eigi are presumably ironical: even the poet's harsh criticism does not amount to slander, since it is justified. Cf. the verse of Hjalti Skeggjason in Íslendingabók, ÍF I 15.
- P. 97/15 With ch. 62 compare the pula of elds heiti in A and B, SnE 1848–87, II 486, 569–70.
- Verse 370 Skj A I 424, B I 393. Anonymous; probably from a poem about Magnús góði (Fidjestøl 1982, 168, 204). It may be about his burning of Jómsborg, described in Hkr III 38–40; cf. verse 387.
- Verse 371 Skj A I 390, B I 360; see notes to verses 358 and 363.
- Verse 372 Skj A I 182, B I 171; anonymous fragment (and probably an incomplete sentence, see under vaða in Glossary) of unknown context, though it seems to be about the sea burial of Haki, cf. Hkr I 45.
- Verse 373 Skj A I 387, B I 357. Taken to be from a poem about Haraldr harðráði composed after 1048 (cf. Hkr III 111). Two further stanzas are found, one in Hkr III 111, Fagrskinna 252, Morkinskinna 158, Hulda-Hrokkinskinna (Fms VI 254), the other in Morkinskinna 158–9 and Hulda-Hrokkinskinna (Fms VI 254–5); part of the second appears also in verse 400 below. Nothing further is known of the poet, though he is mentioned as having composed about Haraldr harðráði in Skáldatal (SnE 1848–87, III 275). The quotation here is an incomplete sentence, and the objects of feldu and eldi, and the word on which slóðar depends (presumably the name of an animal, giving a kenning for ship, which might have been the obj. of feldu) would have been in the unquoted lines. Kock (NN 874), however, takes Glamma slóðar with gramr and eldi and feldu as absolute.
- Verse 374 Skj A I 413, B I 383. A fragment probably of a poem about Óláfr kyrri composed c. 1070. The poet is presumably the Atli litli mentioned in Skáldatal (SnE 1848–87, III 275) as one of Óláfr kyrri's poets, but he is otherwise unknown. See Fidjestøl 1982. 149.

Verse 375 Skj A I 327, B I 302. Also in Hkr II 57 (and $\acute{O}H$ 87, Fagrskinna 173), where it is said to come from a flokkr about the otherwise unknown Klængr Brúsason (Brúna- or Bjarnason in some manuscripts of $\acute{O}H$; some also make him the author). The name of the poet, Pórðr Sjáreksson, is given only in Fagrskinna; in Hkr and $\acute{O}H$ the verse is anonymous as here. The event referred to is Earl Sveinn's burning of Niðaróss in 1014.

Verse 376 Skj A I 350-51, B I 323; see note to verse 275.

Verse 377 Skj A I 473, B I 446; see note to verse 367.

Verse 378 Skj A I 391, B I 360; see note to verse 358. The context of the verse is unknown, but it may be surmised that the verse refers to one of Haraldr harðráði's exploits in the Mediterranean or Russia and that he and his men (referred to as vikings) are burning an enemy town. Kock (NN 1143) takes the first line as a separate sentence and virki borgar styrks vísa as the object of brutu af 'broke down' (af is the reading of R and TC; A has of, B ór). If the vísi is Haraldr harðráði this is unlikely. Perhaps the genitive goes with víkingar ('the strong leader's vikings rapaciously broke down the city's fortification').

Verse 379 Skj A I 488, B I 460. Taken to be from Halldórr's Útfarardrápa, c. 1120, about King Sigurðr Magnússon's expedition to Jerusalem in 1109. This verse is only found here, but others are quoted in Hkr, Morkinskinna, Hulda–Hrokkinskinna, Fagrskinna, and one in TGT (which may be a stef). Fidjestøl 1982, 157, points out that there is actually little in verse 379 to connect it with Útfarardrápa, and it may belong to another poem. Note the alternation of sg. þú and pl. ér: the latter perhaps refers to the king and his men. There is similar alternation in verses 3 and 8 of the poem (Skj B I 458–9), though generally the king and his men are referred to in the 3rd pers.

P. 99/5 With ch. 63 compare the pula of dægra heiti in A and B, SnE 1848–87, II 485, 569. Lines 5–7 appear in a passage in AM 281 4to supposed to have been part of Hauksbók (1892–6, 502), with the heading 'Nofn stundanna'. The text there is more similar to that in U than to any of the other manuscripts that contain the passage (it omits ár and has haust before vár), though it contains the additional word líf. Cf. Hauksbók 1892–6, cxxxiv.

- Verse 380 Alvíssmál (thus A and C; called Qlvismál in U) 30. Cf. verse 332.
- P. 99/21 Maðr er hverr fyrir sér: possibly 'each man has a separate name' rather than 'each one in himself is simply "man" or 'each man is an individual'. Cf. 108/30 and note. With the terms for king in ch. 64 compare the pula of names for kings in A and B, SnE 1848–87, II 469, 551.
- P. 99/22 C adds er after kallat (written 'kalladr'): '[It is] the first and highest term for man when a man is called emperor'; but the first phrase of the sentence can be taken as adverbial: 'with the first and highest term for man a man is called emperor.'
- Verse 381 Skj A I 424, B I 394. An anonymous fragment perhaps about Sveinn Úlfsson's son Knútr (the saint); or possibly Knútr inn ríki. See Fidjestøl 1982, 168.
- Verse 382 Skj A I 316, B I 292. From an otherwise unknown poem about a King Óláfr, maybe the Swedish king Óláfr Eiríksson (died c. 1022), or St Óláfr Haraldsson of Norway (died 1030). See Fidjestøl 1982, 124–5. The poet is given the nickname svarti in B (cf. Hkr II 91–2, 95, 100). Otherwise only one lausavísa survives of Gizurr's work (if it is the same person; cf. Index) in Hkr II 358–9, ÓH 544 (where one manuscript gives the poet the nickname gullbrá) and the Legendary saga (where it is ascribed to Pormóðr Kolbrúnarskáld). Cf. note to verse 4 and Gizurr in Index.
- Verse 383 Skj A I 289, B I 267; see note to verse 310. Kock's interpretation (1946–49, I 137; cf. 1933, 292–3), takes víg-Freys (i. e. Óðinn's) munlaust (joyless?) óskvíf as the object of tekr, and thus a kenning similar to Priðja biðkván, verse 10/4; but in NN 717, Víg-Freys seems to be taken as in apposition to Óska. Falk (1922, 61–2) reads mundlaust, cf. verse 122 and ómyndr in Glossary. The verse seems to be inciting the Swedish king to invade Norway; cf. Fagrskinna 178.
- Verse 384 Skj A I 347, B I 320; see note to verse 1.
- Verse 385 Skj A I 375, B I 345; see note to verse 120. This verse perhaps relates to the same episode as verse 6 of Sexstefja (Skj A I 370), see Hkr III 86–7, Fagrskinna 235, Morkinskinna 83–4 and Fidjestøl 1982, 136, in which case haugs skunduðr refers to Constantine Monomachos; though actually it was Michael Kalafates who was blinded, see Hkr III 87–8 n.
- Verse 386 Skj A I 256, B I 238; lines 1–2 also quoted as verse 411;

from Bersoglisvísur, addressed to Magnús góði c. 1038, warning him to be careful how he ruled Norway. There are further quotations from this poem in Hulda–Hrokkinskinna, Hkr, ÓH, Fagrskinna, Ágrip, TGT and in other manuscripts of Kings' Sagas.

Verse 387 Skj A I 335–6, B I 309. The first half of a stanza that appears in Hkr III 39–40 (with the first word there Skjǫldungr) attributed, undoubtedly correctly, to Arnórr jarlaskáld, and taken to be from his Hrynhenda addressed to Magnús góði in 1046. Another verse is quoted as verse 406 (also attributed to Markús in A), and there are more quotations in Morkinskinna, Hulda–Hrokkinskinna, Hkr, ÓH, Knýtlinga saga, TGT, FoGT, and in the version of Skáldskaparmál in W (SnE 1924, 105; cf. also note to verse 116). Hrynhenda is the first major court poem in the hrynhent metre that survives. The error in attribution is presumably due to Markús Skeggjason's Eiríksdrápa being in the same metre (cf. verse 111 n.). On the incident referred to here, cf. verse 370 and n. Verse 388 Skj A I 318, B I 294; see note to verse 115.

Verse 389 = verse 186/5–6; see note to verse 120. The explanation of landreki (101/8–9) is improbable. The second element is likely to be related to Old English gerec 'rule' and Old Norse rekja 'straighten out' rather than to reka 'drive'. See ÁBM under -reki (2).

P. 101/10–24 Cf. the Ættartölur following Hversu Noregr byggðist in Flb I 25–7. Parts of Hyndluljóð (e. g. verses 11–16) seem to be based on a similar tradition; see also SnE II 469. Cf. 103/1–17 and note and see Introduction p. xxv.

Verse 390 Skj A I 289, B I 267; see note to verse 310.

Verse 391 Skj A I 445, B I 415; see note to verse 111. See Fidjestøl 1982, 153.

Verse 392 Skj A I 51, B I 45; lines 5–6 of a lausavísa from Egils saga (ÍF II 145). The sentence and the kenning are incomplete: the words af augum mér grímu come in lines 7–8. For the context see Egils saga ch. 55.

Verse 393 Skj A I 65, B I 57; the second half of verse 4 of Hákonarmál; the whole stanza is quoted in Hkr I 186–7 and Fagrskinna 88 (both have gramr instead of gylfi in line 3); see note to verse 7.

Verse 394 = verse 279/1–2 (note the variant reading in the second line); see note to verse 6.

Verse 395 Skj A I 289, B I 267; see note to verse 310. This was evidently the first stanza of the poem. Exchanging mins and sins

(as in C) and taking bragar míns with háttu and hróðrs síns with upphaf would perhaps make better sense.

Verse 396 Skj A I 405, B I 374; taken to be part of Stúfsdrápa, the only poem of Stúfr inn blindi of which anything survives (cf. Stúfs þáttr, ÍF V 290 and note). Other fragments are found in Hkr, Morkinskinna, Hulda–Hrokkinskinna, Fagrskinna. The poem was composed c. 1067 in memory of Haraldr harðráði. Haraldr's battle against Sveinn Úlfsson of Denmark by the Niz took place in 1062. See Hkr III 148–51.

Verse 397 Skj A I 165, B I 156; the second half of stanza 27 of Hallfrøðr's Óláfsdrápa (erfidrápa) composed in memory of Óláfr Tryggvason c. 1001; see note to verse 10. The complete stanza is quoted in ÓTM II 294, and other stanzas are quoted in ÓTM, Hkr, Oddr Snorrason 1932, Fagrskinna, Hallfreðar saga; and a halfstanza each in A (SnE 1848–87, II 493) and Þiðreks saga 4. On this poem see Fidjestøl 1982, 109–11, 234–5.

Verse 398 Skj A I 444, B I 414; verse 1 (and probably the original opening) of Eiríksdrápa, see note to verse 111. A and B replace this verse by:

Ríkr er harra hneykir, heldr guð jofurs veldi sanndyggs, vitut seggir Sveins bræðr konung æðra.

(Skj A I 452, B I 420; in line 3 B has sennir for seggir). This seems to be from a poem about St Knútr Sveinsson, also by Markús Skeggjason. See note to verse 270 above. Knútr apparently had two brothers called Sveinn (one a half-brother; see IF XXXV 135, 366).

P. 103/1–17 is again related to the Ættartölur in Flb I 25–7, see note to 101/10–24. Compare the þula of konunga heiti in A and B (Skj A I 671).

Verse 399 Skj A I 476, B I 448; Finnur Jónsson in Skj makes this verse 1 of Ingadrápa, composed about King Ingi Haraldsson of Norway after 1155 (the battle at Holmengrå took place in 1139, cf. Hkr III 316; other verses in the poem refer to the death of King Sigurðr in 1155, Hkr III 340–41). There are three further stanzas quoted in Morkinskinna and Fagrskinna. Fidjestøl (1982, 155) assigns these four stanzas, together with another half-stanza in Hkr III 346, Fagrskinna 341 and Hulda–Hrokkinskinna (Fms VII 251), assigned by Finnur Jónsson (Skj A I 475) to an Eysteinsdrápa (this verse apparently refers to events of 1157), to a poem about the sons of Haraldr gilli different from, and later than, the poem that verse 312 belongs to.

Verse 400 Skj A I 387, B I 357. See note to verse 373. A and B have two further lines:

hirð hygg ek hilmi stýrðu Hugins jól við nes Þjólar.

In line 1 B has hykk for hygg ek; in line 2 þjóðar for Þjólar. The complete stanza is found in Morkinskinna 158 and Hulda–Hrokkinskinna (Fms VI 254–5). It is possible to take both hirð and hilmi as either acc. or dat., i. e. it is difficult to see whether it is the men who provided slain for the king or vice versa. In the texts in Morkinskinna and Fms where the verb is gerðu it perhaps seems more likely to be the latter. Cf. stýra in Glossary and SnE 1848–87, I 524.

Verse 401 Skj A I 140, B I 132; apparently all that survives of a poem in praise of an unidentifiable king (or hero). Cf verse 49. These two fragments are all that survives of Gamli's verse; because of the subject of verse 49 he is assumed to have lived in the tenth century. See Fidjestøl 1982, 165. Kock (NN 422) takes innan borðs as an adverbial phrase ('on a ship') and the phrase á aflgjǫrð orða tungu naglfara ok meðalkafla as 'into the mighty activity of the speech of sword's blade and hilt', i. e. of battle. Edith Marold (1994, 575) takes naglfari to mean 'ship' (cf. Index and note to verse 156), innanborðs naglfara as 'on board ship', meðalkafla gen. with tungu ok orða and this phrase gen. with á aflgerð ('Krafttat der Sprache und der Worte des Schwertes'). Lines 1–2 have dunhenda (Háttatal 24). Lines 3–4 both have aðalhending (cf. Háttatal 42).

Verse $402 \, Skj$ A I 60, B I 53. The only verse attributed to a woman in $Sk\acute{a}ldskaparm\acute{a}l$. Taken to be from $Sendib\acute{t}r$, apparently about Haraldr hárfagri, though it may have been addressed to Haraldr's son Hálfdan svarti; see Hkr I 142. There are four further half-stanzas in $\acute{O}H$ 12, one of them also in Hkr I 142 and $\acute{O}TM$ I 13 (the other three only in one manuscript of $\acute{O}H$). Nothing further is known about the poetess, though she must have been Norwegian and a contemporary of Guthormr sindri (early tenth century; see Hkr I 141 and Finnur Jónsson 1920–24, I 445–6).

Verse 403 Skj A I 474, B I 446, where the first two lines are lines

1–2 of verse 6 and the second two are lines 3–4 of verse 7 of the poem, which is the arrangement in Hkr III 328–9, Morkinskinna 444 and Hulda–Hrokkinskinna (Fms VII 235–6); see note to verse 367.

Verse 404 Skj A I 354, B I 326; a fragment, not found elsewhere, of an otherwise unknown poem (or perhaps belonging to the lost Blágagladrápa), possibly about Haraldr harðráði. See Fidjestøl 1982, 132; Finnur Jónsson 1920–24, I 609, 611.

Verse 405 Skj A I 383, B I 353; second half of a lausavisa quoted in Hkr III 190 and in Fagrskinna 288, Morkinskinna 279, Hulda-Hrokkinskinna (Fms VI 420) and in Hemings þáttr 1962, 53 (Hauksbók 1892–6, 344–5); for the context see Haralds saga Sigurðarsonar in Hkr III, ch. 92. Besides the lausavísur attributed to Þjóðólfr Arnórs-son in the Kings' Sagas (two lines of one of which are quoted in FGT), there is a half-verse quoted in TGT and some further quotations in Sneglu-Halla þáttr (ÍF IX 267–8, 273, 293). Verse 406 Skj A I 338, B I 311; see note to verse 387. Perhaps a stef, unless it is the conclusion of the poem (see Fidjestøl 1982, 191). Verse 407 Skj A I 439, B I 409. Perhaps from a poem about Óláfr kyrri (d. 1093). Þorkell is named as one of his poets in one manuscript of Skáldatal (in U, perhaps as a result of dittography), though he also composed about Magnús berfættr (d. 1103), see SnE 1848–87, III 275–6; and this verse was apparently composed in Iceland (cf. of svalan ægi) about a gift he had received. Kings of Norway did claim descent from Sigurðr Fáfnisbani (cf. Flb I 26), but Snorri seems to be taking Volsunga niðr to mean just descendant of kings, i. e. king. Fidjestøl (1982, 152) points out that the metre (fornyrðislag) and the reference to eddic material make the fragment an interesting anticipation of the later twelfthcentury skaldic poems influenced by eddic poetry, e. g. his no. 78 (Ívarr Ingimundarson, Skj A I 495–502) and 100c (Anonymous, Skj A I 597–9); cf. Gísl Illugason, who also composed in fornyrðislag about Magnús berfættr c. 1104 (Skj A I 440–44; B I 409–13) and see note to verse 7 above. Vápn is probably sg. (the details of the gift are not known); in line 4 the manuscript spelling '-bvin' implies gullbúinn, which might be a mistake either for gullbúin (C has a single n) or for gullbúit (which is what TUAB have). Emendation to -búit would give a sense closer to what one might expect, but the text as it stands is neither ungrammatical nor meaningless (gullbúinn with niðr), though it may be unusual. Pl. gullbúin would also of course be possible if vápn is taken as pl. There also survive parts of a poem by Porkell about Magnús berfættr (composed c. 1104; in Hkr, Fagrskinna, Morkinskinna, Hulda–Hrokkinskinna) and one lausavísa (see Hkr III 217, Morkinskinna 305, Fagrskinna 306).

Verse 408 Skj A I 296, B I 272. The second half of verse 82 in Hkr II 172–3 (also in ÓH 254 and the Legendary saga 106, Fagrskinna 181, Orkneyinga saga 41); see note to verse 196. The reference of bér is to Óláfr Haraldsson of Norway. Ógnbráðr ynglingr might be vocative, or it could be taken with engi as part of the subject of varð. The rel. clause presumably is to be taken with engi or as the complement, and á jǫrðu as an adv. phrase meaning 'ever'.

Verse 409 Skj A I 444, B I 414; see note to verse 111. This may be a stef, see Fidjestøl 1982, 152–3.

Verse 410 Skj A I 390, B I 360; see note to verse 358.

Verse 411 See textual note and verse 386 and note.

P. 105/21 Cf. 103/6-8.

- P. 105/23 Here begins the fragment of the redaction of the second part of Skáldskaparmál in W (SnE 1924, 103).
- P. 105/24 Bragi (presumably the same person) also appears at 103/4.
- P. 105/29–32 These seem to be euhemeristic explanations of the origins of names of countries, presumably based on the assumption that they were founded by a king called Óðinn. The hann in line 32 presumably refers to Óðinn too. Cf. Gylf. Prologue 5–6.
- P. 106/7 ok holða is not in T, U or C (or in the version of this section of Skáldskaparmál in W, SnE 1924, 103), but A has 'hálldar ok holdar' (B seems to have had the same, but is only partly legible here), and R has the spellings 'havlþar ok havlda' (the ending of the third word in R here is anomalous). U has 'haulþa' (and omits ok holðar ok). Holðr and holdr are two forms of the same word, of which the first is the older (the later form first appears in fourteenth-century manuscripts in Iceland; see Noreen 1923, § 238 b); some scribes seem to have interpreted them as different words. It is possible that one of them represents the Norwegian form hauld-corresponding to Icelandic holð-. Cf. verse 440 and note to verses 439–442.
- P. 106/11–18 Some of the words in these lists are adjectives. They would be what are identified as sannkenningar in Háttatal p. 6,

- though in $Sk\acute{a}ldskaparm\acute{a}l$ ch. 67 all the examples of sannkenningar are (compound) nouns except for $\acute{o}slækinn$. There is a similar alternation between nom. and acc. in 106/11-13 as in some earlier lists (cf. note to 14/25-30), resulting in some ambiguity as to whether the weak nouns ending in -a are acc. masculine or nom. feminine.
- P. 106/30 ámælisskor: possibly a piece of wood with a charge or accusation (ámæli) indicated on it by a cut (skor; English score). This perhaps needs a number of people to deliver, to prevent the person charged rejecting it with violence or to provide witnesses. The second element may, however, be skor 'decision, verdict'; cf. Ordbog over det norrøne prosasprog I (1995), 412.
- P. 107/8 of is perhaps an error for ef. Cf. t. n.
- P. 107/23 ósvifruðr perhaps should have a long i, though before a consonant group vowels were often shortened (Noreen 1923, § 127). Cf. ósvifrandi in Glossary and ÁBM 1001.
- P. 107/29 Cf. the pulur of names for women in verse 438 and the additional pulur in A, SnE 1848–87, II 489–91, and the verses in U, SnE 1848–87, II 363; and Rígspula 25.
- P. 108/1 eigi ritat, i. e. hér? The comment is unlikely to relate to unwritten poems, though it could relate to gaps in the writer's source; cf. 85/13 and note. Or it may be that the author is squeamish about including insulting words for woman; or that he intended to add to his list later. Cf. SnE 1931, 258/4–8 ('Den lille Skálda'); and 40/15 above.
- P. 108/6–9 More kennings (see 87/8–9 n.). Note ókent line 9; the writer is deliberately listing both kennings and heiti. There are many other examples of kennings being included in the lists in the rest of the chapter and in chs 70–72.
- P. 108/8–9 On kennings linking sword and head in relation to Heimdallr see also 19/11–13, Háttatal 7 (and Vindhlér in Index there) and Gylf. 26/1 (see note ad loc.). The reference is clearly to a lost myth.
- P. $108/10 \ \phi rmj \ \phi r$ intensive or = $\ \varphi r$ 'arrow'? The second element is maybe related to meta 'measure, evaluate'; or it should perhaps be read $mj \ \phi tt$, n. of $mj \ \phi r$ a. 'slender'.
- P. 108/17 Tennar (so R, A and C) is possibly a genuine alternative form of the pl. of tonn. Cf. Cleasby and Vigfusson 1957, 648; Biskupa sögur 1858–78, I 641/21; Hrafns saga Sveinbjarnarsonar 1987, t. n. to 3/29. T has Tennr, B Tenn, U Tennrnar.

- P. 108/22 The syntax is rather compressed; presumably (má) kenna (þat) til hauss eða hjarna eða hǫfuðs, eða skegg (má) kenna við hǫku . . . U has ok kent for the first kenna and en skegg kenna menn við hǫku; ABC omit eða (3) and continue Skegg skal kenna við hǫku. T has the same as R except for en skegg instead of eða skegg.
- P. 108/23–33 Cf. the bula of hugar heiti ok hjarta in A, SnE 1848–87, II 490 and the verse of Illugi, SnE 1848–87, II 493.
- P. 108/30 eru sér: are on their own, i. e. form a separate group. (C has eru enn sér, T and U omit the sentence.) But it is not clear whether this refers to the preceding or the following names, though in R the next word has a slightly enlarged capital. Cf. 99/21 and note.
- P. 108/33-8 Cf. the bula of heiti á hendi in A, SnE 1848-87, II 490.
- P. 109/6 ljóðæska: the second element is probably related to ætt, the first to ljóðr, lýðr 'people'; the meaning 'childishness' is probably a later development due to the influence of æska 'youth'.
- P. 109/8–9 The sudden introduction of comments on kennings for battle is probably because some of the words for voice in lines 7–8 (e. g. gnýr, glymr, gangr) can be used as base-words in kennings for battle with weapons as determinants (see Meissner 1921, 187, 192). Cf. SGT 26, 27.
- P. 109/10 bragvísi is perhaps for bragðvísi rather than having bragr as the first element.
- P. 109/11–22 In ch. 74 word-play is recognised between words with vowels of different lengths (far and fár; lið and líð; hlið and hlíð) as well (apparently) as between words beginning with l- and hl-, though the hl- words could be regarded as a different group. (From the references to ofljóst in TGT 66 and 89, it looks as though the author of that treatise saw ofljóst as consisting principally of play with words distinguished only by length of a vowel; cf. Háttatal p. 54.) The writer also disregards the -r ending in the nominatives of liðr (109/16) and the ox-name hliðr (109/18); his awareness of this is marked by the care he takes to make sure the masculine words appear in the accusative. It seems likely that his readiness to accept imprecise equivalences arose from the fact that he was influenced by the written forms of words, where vowel length would not usually have been marked.
- Verses 412–517 Skj A I 653–79, B I 658–71. These pulur are all anonymous, though assumed to be from the twelfth century; cf.

verses 325–31. The verse divisions are not always apparent in R, though they are usually marked by a point and/or a capital letter. The beginning of each list (where horizontal lines are printed in SnE 1931 and this edition) is generally marked by a large capital, usually but not always in the margin. A and B have the following additional pulur: konunga heiti (after verse 416 in A, before verse 412 in B), dverga heiti (after konunga heiti in A, after verse 416 in B), Óðins nofn (heiti) (after verse 427), viða(r) heiti (after verse 502), and the rest after verse 517: tungls heiti, dægra heiti, himins heiti (a different list from that in verse 516), veðra heiti, elds heiti, orma heiti, hesta heiti, hauks heiti, hrafns heiti, hana (hæsna) heiti, ara (arnar) heiti, fugla heiti (the extant text of B ends in the first verse of this bula), kvenna heiti ókend (a different list from that in verse 438), hugar heiti ok hjarta, grýlu heiti, heiti á hendi, heiti valkyrja, kvenna heiti ókend (a third list), eyja heiti, fjarða heiti, sáðs heiti, nofn Ægis dætra.

Verses 412–16 That these are names of sea-kings is not revealed until the end of the list in R, C and T which (generally) have no headings for the pulur, though A and B do (see textual notes). (If R originally had headings in red, they have now disappeared. Headings have been added in the margins later than the main text in T, and in some cases also in C.) Cf. the list in TGT 25, 99 (in W and A) and the pula of konunga heiti in A and B (SnE 1848–87, II 469, 551).

Verse 416/3 For Gautrekr A has 'Gavær' and B has 'Gaver', perhaps the source of the name Gavir/Gavér in Gylf. Prologue 5. Cf. also Gevarus in Saxo Grammaticus (1979–80, II 51).

Verses 423–7 Cf. Vilhjálms saga sjóðs 66–8; Einar Ól. Sveinsson 1942, 140–43.

Verses 436 Cf. Grímnismál 36 (Gylf. ch. 36) and the pula of heiti valkyrja in A (SnE 1848–87, II 490).

Verse 438 There is the heading kvenna heiti (ókend) in A and B. Cf. the bulur in A and U, SnE 1848–87, II 363, 489–91, and Rígspula 25.

Verses 439–448 Some of the words in these stanzas are given as proper names earlier in Skáldskaparmál (chs 64–5), but here seem unequivocally to be taken as common nouns. Cf. the pula of konunga heiti in A and B (SnE 1848–87, II 469, 551) and Rígspula 12, 24, 41.

Verses 440-42 The repetitions presumably imply corruption. Kock,

NN 2160, suggests aldir for one of the occurrences of hǫlðar in verse 440 (cf. note to 106/7).

Verse 442/3 There is an additional line here in T and B (ok sælkerar) and A (ok sælingar) which would make the stanza of regular length.

Verses 449–50 contain names for battle (headed orrostu heiti in A and B). Some (or variants of them) are found as proper names elsewhere (for example among the valkyrie-names in Grímnismál 36, and in the bula of heiti valkyrja in A, SnE 1848–87, II 490).

Verses 451–62 In the sword-names, some are kennings, some half-kennings or base-words for kennings (e. g. eldr, logi in verse 458, if these are not metaphors; 'fire of battle' is a well known kenning-type, see Meissner 1921, 150–51); some are nomina agentis apparently used in a passive sense (e. g. snyrtir, herðir, skerðir, verses 451, 456, 458); some are found as names of swords in sagas or poems. Some seem to be names for persons (i. e. they are personified, sometimes using giant-names). Some words under 'parts of sword' (verses 460–62) seem to be sword-names. Rather surprisingly, most sword-names seem to be masculine (they may be based on mækir rather than sverð). Many words of all these types may be artificially created and so not in accordance with natural word-formation.

Verse 455/5 bensægr: perhaps sægr m. 'strip' (cf. blóðrefill), but the vowel is uncertain. R uses ϕ , T δ , A has æ and B has o. The second element may be related to sax n. 'short sword'.

Verse 460–62 The heading is heiti á sverði in A and B (cf. note to verse 495). Some of the terms clearly are for parts of a sword, others seem to be names for the whole sword. Cf. note to verses 451–62.

Verse 466/7–8 'Jólfr's artefact (made by him or owned, given by him?) is the best whizzer' or perhaps 'Pura is the best work of Jólfr'. But since \phifst is strong, en must be an adverb or conjunction (enn?) rather than a pronoun or article, and the meaning might be 'there is Jólfr's artefact, but the best is Pura'.

Verse 472/1-2 I. e. names for helmet. See t. n.

Verses 475–8 Cf. the bulur for names of waves ('nofn Ægis dœtra') and fiords ('fjarða heiti') in A (SnE 1848–87, II 493). With verse 478 compare verse 357 and note, and see note to 36/25–6. It is difficult to know how many of the words for wave in verse 478 are to be taken as the names of Ægir's daughters.

Verse 479–84 contain names for rivers (the heading in A is Á heiti, in B Vatna heiti). Many of the river-names are mythical, some geographical, in some cases beyond the travels of vikings (e. g. Ganges, for Old Norse occurrences of which see Index), and probably derived from books. Cf. the identifications in Cleasby and Vigfusson 1957, 780. Eufrates and several of the other rivers here are mentioned in Heimslýsing in Hauksbók (1892–6, 150); see Index.

Verse 485 contains names for kinds of fish. See t. n.

Verse 487 In SnE 1931, 207 and SnE 1848–87, I 579, the lines are reordered to make the alliteration regular (lines 2 and 8 exchanged); they also have lines 3–4 as the final couplet, as in TAB (but not in C).

Verses 489–90 contain names for kinds of whales (see t. n.), some of which can only tentatively be identified with modern terms, and some of which are fabulous (see Glossary). There are 22 varieties of whale described in KSk 15-17 (cf. also 29), of which 19 correspond more or less to items in Snorri's list of 26 (cf. hrafnreyðr and vogn in Glossary). 21 of the varieties in the bula correspond more or less to items in JG 5–13 and 28 (cf. geirhvalr, reyðarkálfr, kýrhvalr, vogn in Glossary). Three of the varieties in the bula have no equivalent either in Konungs skuggsjá or in Jón Guðmundsson: bunungr, probably a mistake for v. l. (in T) búrungr, which is perhaps the same as búrhvalr 'sperm whale', in Konungs skuggsjá and Jón Guðmundsson; blæjuhvalr, according to Blöndal 1920-24 the same as stökkull (this term is used to mean both a fabulous whale and a dolphin, see JG 35-36); and skútuhvalr, which perhaps, like skútufiskur, means one caught from a skúta. See also Þórunn Valdimarsdóttir 1989, 313–18.

Verses 495–500 Heading in A and B: heiti á skipi, i. e. names for parts of a ship, or in some cases for things on a ship. Cf. note to verse 460.

Verses 501–502 Cf. the pula of fjarða heiti in A (SnE 1848–87, II 493).

Verses 503–14 With the pulur of animal names, it is particularly uncertain how many are proper names, how many common nouns for particular kinds of animals, and how many familiar terms for them.

Verse 503/10 Perhaps emend to Vingnir (as in A and B), as another name for an ox; see Index.

Verse 509/3 Kolmúla ('coal-muzzle') is perhaps a name.

Verse 512/1 The first word in RTC (where this list appears as if a continuation of verse 511, see t. n.) could perhaps be read as a name Jórir. A and B have Hjortr; A has a large (red) capital H, but in B there is space left for it, as elsewhere in this manuscript. The list is of names for stags (heading Hjartar heiti in A and B, see t. n.).

Verse 516 The names for the heavens are here treated as proper names; in ch. 56 they seem mostly to be common nouns (heiti) for the sky. Cf. the additional pula of Himins heiti in A and B (SnE 1848–87, II 485–6, 569).

Verse 517 On the additional pulur after this verse in A and B, see note to verses 412–517.
